INTRODUCTION.

THIS book is part of the "Advanced Circle Course" for the training of Sunday school workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is based largely upon the earlier book of the Circle Course entitled "Doctrines and Polity of the M. E. Church, South," as written by Drs. Tillett and Atkins for the Teacher-Training Department when organized in 1901. In accordance with the international teacher-training standards adopted by our own and other denominations in 1908, the book is now enlarged and revised. In addition to most of the matter contributed by Drs. Tillett and Atkins, sections upon Church History and Missions have been introduced, and the book in its present form consists of four instead of two sections, as follows: Church History, by Dr. H. M. Hamill; Our Methodist Doctrines, by Dr. W. F. Tillett; Our Methodist Polity, by Dr. (now Bishop) James Atkins; Church Missions, by Dr. E. F. Cook.

As a condensed handbook the little book, in addition to its use in teacher-training, deserves a place in the home of every Southern Methodist preacher and layman.

THE ANCIENT CHURCH.

B.C. 4-A.D. 1517.

Under five divisions, in order, the story of the Ancient Church will be summarized :

1. Organization, B.C. 4-A.D. 100. From the birth of Christ to the death of John, the last of the apostles.

The ancient world in Christ's time was centered about the "Great" or Mediterranean Sea, his native Palestine occupying the strategic junction of Asia, Africa, and Europe. Through this small country poured much of the commerce of the ancient world, and into it came the leaders of many nations. At the time of our Lord's advent certain conditions met in singular conjunction and aided in the organization of his kingdom and Church. In all lands, as in Palestine, Rome held the nations in subjection, and her governors, garrisons, post roads, and especially her laws, were everywhere in evidence. The Greek language, too, was universally the medium of educated intercourse, and the Greek "Septuagint" version of the Old Testament and the Greek Gospels and Epistles of the New Testament were accessible even to the common people. In nearly all cities and towns the Jewish synagogue, with its rolls of Jewish Scriptures and its worship of the one true God, furnished a place for preaching and teaching. Add to this the fact that among all nations at this time, especially the Jews, in response doubtless to the Hebrew prophecies and the brooding Spirit of God, there was a profound expectation of the advent of the Messiah.

Christ's ministry, when he came, was to the perverted Jewish sense a mockery of their hope and ambition. Four brief years were devoted to healing diseases and working miracles, to teaching the multitudes, to clashings with Jewish hierarchy, to training the Twelve as his successors and as missionaries and evangelists among all nations; ending in his thirty-fourth year in the death of a malefactor upon the Roman cross, followed by his resurrection and ascension. Then came the descent of the promised Holy Spirit upon the newly born "mother Church" at Jerusalem, again at Samaria, at Cæsarea, and at Antioch; the admission of the Gentiles; the three missionary tours of Paul; the writing of the New Testament by eight inspired men; the martyrdom, according to tradition, of all the apostles save John; the beginnings of dire persecution at home and in foreign countries, closing this first century of organization with the banishment and death of John, last of the apostles and successor to Paul, about the year A.D. 100.

2. Extension, A.D. 100-313. From the death of John to the Decree of Toleration by Constantine, the Roman Emperor.

After the Apostolic Age, which closed with John's death, came what are called the "Sub-Apostolic" and "Patristic," which include the first four centuries of Christianity. Jerusalem had fallen, but the "Holy Land" continued to be a center of Christian interest and influence. Antioch in Syria became the great missionary and Gentile city, where believers were first called "Christians." Ephesus was the seat of Christian influence in Asia Minor, Alexandria was the great Christian city of Africa, and Rome as the imperial city and prison home of Paul held high eminence among all Churches. Other Christian centers of note were Philippi, Corinth, and Smyrna. Among the greater leaders of the extending Church during this period were Ignatius, martyr at Rome, Polycarp, martyr at Smyrna, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, and Origen, greatest of all patristic writers and apologists of the early Church. Leadership, in most cases, was the inevitable credential to martyrdom. Twelve imperial persecutions occurred during the first three centuries A.D., chief of which in extent and severity were those under the Emperors Nero, A.D. 64-68; Domitian, 95-96; Trajan, 104-117; Marcus Aurelius, 161-180; Decius, 250-253; and last and worst Diocletian, 303-313. As in all ages and lands, the Church grew and strengthened most when its footprints were marked with its holiest blood.

It was during these centuries, beginning in the second, that the New Testament canon as it now stands was finally determined. For a time certain books, as 2 Peter, James, 2 and 3 John, Jude, were accounted as "disputantia," or doubtful. Translations into the Syriac, Latin, Coptic, and Ethiopic were made. Heresies began to appear; and as the centuries passed and the Church became corrupted, their number increased greatly. The one overshadowing heresy of the earlier Christian Church was known as "Gnosticism." John, before his death and in at least two of his books, found it necessary to condemn it sharply, and after his death it spread widely and perilously throughout the Church as a most plausible and dangerous doctrine. It was a mixture of Oriental and Platonic philosophy with Judaism and some Christian elements, denying that Christ was truly divine, but an emanation only of deity. It taught that matter was evil and that sin was in matter, not in spirit, which led to asceticism or bodily self-punishment on the one part, and on the other to bodily indulgence of the grossest and vilest forms.

3. Controversy, A.D. 313-590. From the Edict of Constantine to the accession of Pope Gregory I., the first recognized "Pope."

Persecution ended for a long season upon the coming to the throne of Constantine the Great as Roman Emperor, A.D. 306-337. At first ruler of the so-called Eastern Empire, he overthrew the Emperor Licinius in the Western Empire, and in A.D. 313 published throughout the world his famous edict of full toleration of Christianity. The motive to his great deed is accredited to his Christian mother, Helena. In A.D. 325 the Emperor convened the first general council of the Church at Nice, its chief purpose being to settle the controversy over the Arian heresy, which widely prevailed and which taught that Christ was created and was not of the same substance with the Father. The council condemned the heresy and cast out its author and chief propagators.

In A.D. 465 began the series of barbaric invasions of Rome and the Empire, led by Vandals and Moors. At this time the bishop of Rome for the first time began to assume the title of "Papa" or Pope, though until Gregory I. the title was vigorously resisted. To this period also belongs the founding of the earlier missions of the Church, notably in Abyssinia by Ædesius, among the Goths by Ulfilas, in Ireland by St. Patrick, in Scotland by Columba, and in Britain by unknown missionaries. Successive councils decreed the celibacy of the clergy, and the consequent viciousness of this class soon began to appear. It was at this time, too, that the Church began the canonization and worship of its martyrs and saints, of the Virgin Mary, and of images. The Church for centuries was vexed with controversies upon all possible ecclesiastical and Scriptural matters. Councils were convened to adjust them at Constantinople A.D. 381, at Ephesus 431, at Chalcedon 451, and again at Constantinople 553—all for the purpose of silencing the warring factions and giving official condemnation or commendation to the doctrines in question, most of which had to do with the nature of Jesus Christ. Among the great leaders in these famous and often bitter controversies were Origen of Alexandria, A.D. 185-254; Dionysius, of the same city and time; Arius, who died 336; Chrysostom, 347-407; Pelagius, 370-440; and foremost of them all, Augustine, 354-430.

4. The Dark Ages, A.D. 590-1270. From the accession of Pope Gregory I. to the close of the Crusades.

The Middle or "Dark Ages" as they are called, lie between the ruin of the Roman Empire and the revival of learning and religion in Europe known commonly as "Protestantism." The Roman Empire, for centuries the noblest patron of law and learning and of civilization generally, began to break to pieces A.D. 476 under the fierce irruption of northern barbarians. As the power of the State decreased the power of the Church increased, though not in spiritual ways. Gregory I., the first to be formally acknowledged as universal bishop or "Pope," was a fitting illustration of the growing rapacity and insolence and wanton abuse of power both spiritually and secularly on the part of the Romish prelates. As one writing of this age says: "Faith became credulity; the spirit of reverence was changed to cringing servility; the light held out by the Church, though not extinguished, was largely obscured." Monasticism began to flourish. Those who ought to have been the preachers and teachers of the unsaved masses shut themselves within monasteries and convents in selfish and luxurious, often in vicious, indulgence. Begging monks were encouraged, and at one time there were twenty-three recognized monastic orders, among whom were the Benedictine, the Carmelite, the Dominican, the Franciscan, and later the Jesuits. Beginning in asceticism and in study of the Scriptures, these orders commonly grew wealthy, corrupt, and insolent, and their spacious endowed monasteries were centers of profligacy and of persecution. Yet to them it is just to say that we owe not a little of the literature and scholarship that survived the Dark Ages. Of all the centuries of this darkness the tenth was the worst, to which belonged Pope John XII., who was guilty of almost every conceivable crime. After him a few years later came Pope Benedict IX., who "committed murder and adultery openly," and "robbed the pilgrims at the graves of the martyrs and turned Rome into a den of thieves."

Mohammed and his successors, with sword and crescent, for nearly two centuries broke in upon the darkness and corruption of Europe. Mohammed was born A.D. 570, and at the age of forty assumed the rôle of prophet of God, greater than Christ. Fleeing from enemies to Medina A.D. 622, his brief and wonderful career began. During the seventh century his armies swept over Western Asia and Europe like a flame. Mohammed died in A.D. 632, but his "caliphs" took possession of Persia and Asia Minor, attacking Constantinople; then conquered North Africa, and crossing into Spain, founded the Moorish Kingdom, scaled the Pyrenees, threatened Gaul, and finally, at Tours, A.D. 732, were hopelessly shattered by the "Hammer of God," Charles Martel. Mohammedanism was built in a sense upon the Scriptures and recognized the one God and Jesus Christ, but maintained the "Koran" as its Bible to be God's latest revelation and Mohammed his last and greatest prophet.

After Mohammedanism, as the next great event of the Dark Ages, were the "Crusades," seven in number, into the East for the recovery of the Holy Land and Holy City, especially of the Holy Sepulcher, where Christ was said to have been entombed. During the seventh century these had become the prey of the conquering Mohammedans. The Crusades were at first organized by Walter the Penniless and Peter the Hermit, who led the First Crusade, which later, under Godfrey de Bouillon, resulted in the recovery of Jerusalem, A.D. 1099. Bernard of Clairvaux led the Second Crusade in A.D. 1147. In A.D. 1187, after Saladin, King of the Saracens, had retaken Jerusalem from the Crusaders, a Third Crusade was led by Richard Cœur de Lion and others. There followed the Fourth in A.D. 1204, the Fifth in 1229, the Sixth in 1248, and finally the Seventh in 1270. In the main they failed of their purpose, yet they brought together into a better fellowship the nations of Europe, and gathered from the East the best of its learning and spirit, and in general broke the long stagnation of the Dark Ages.

5. The Awakening, A.D. 1270-1517. From the Crusades to the German Reformation.

The Crusades, despite the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives and vast treasures of money, were a decided step toward religious progress and purity. ¹ Yet stronger than the Crusades as an instrument in arousing the Church was its dire corruption and the wickedness and cruelty of its leaders. In Italy, France, Germany, and especially in Spain, the Romish Church had set up the "Inquisition," the most brutal of all agencies erected in the holy name of Christ, and incomparably beyond the barbarities of pagan persecutors. ² It was at this juncture that the conscience of the Church was further aroused by Pope Leo X., who, through Tetzel and others, sought to raise money by sale of papal "indulgences" for all manner of sins. ³ Another sign of awakening was the uprising here and there of communities and individuals in protest against papal degeneracy and aggressiveness. Among these communities were the "Albigenses" of France, in the thirteenth century; the Waldenses, who began at Lyons, 1179. Of individuals were John Wyclif of England, 1320-84, translator into English of the Scriptures, and William Ty-dale a century later, with John Huss, 1369-1415, and greatest and boldest, Savonarola of Italy, 1452-98—all of whom became martyrs to Christian courage and loyalty.⁴ Along with these pioneers of religious reform was a noble line of intellectual reformers, like Abelard and Bernard, Aquinas and Duns Scotus, and Bacon, chiefly of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.⁵ The three great universities of Bologna, Paris, and Oxford also aided greatly in relighting the fallen torches of learning and religion, and it was said of them that their “Greek learning had risen from the grave with the New Testament in its hand.” That the minds and hearts of the nations were being aroused was further shown in the discovery of a new continent by Columbus, 1492, and by the inventions that Providence gave through chosen men to aid in reforms.⁶ One has truly said of certain great discoveries of this age of awakening, that “gunpowder made liberty possible, while the printing press made it a fact.”

PROTESTANTISM.

A.D. 1517-1739.

THE word "Protestantism" stands for that great providential movement that broke the evil domination of the Roman Catholic Church, reformed its worst abuses, set in motion the influences that have largely stripped it of secular authority, curtailed the power of popes and bishops, and finally, and we trust forever, abolished such ecclesiastical institutions as the Inquisition and "auto da fé." This much upon the negative side. As a positive force Protestantism restored religious liberty and freedom of conscience to worship God after one's own convictions and to be protected therein by the State. Largely too it has purified the Church by separating it from all unholy alliances with the State, and by giving the Bible to the people in their own language. It has restored to scriptural orthodoxy and purity certain great doctrines of the Apostolic Church, as that of the Holy Trinity, the divinity of Jesus Christ, the inspiration of the Bible, the right of the individual in matters of faith. If not in mere increase of numbers, yet in the uplifting of the race and amelioration of its suffering, in the enlightenment of the ignorant and the maintenance of pure morals, in the extension of righteousness both in the nation and the individual, in great intellectual as well as spiritual quickenings throughout the world, Protestantism, though only four centuries old, has gone incomparably beyond the best that the Catholic Church has achieved in fifteen centuries, and this without pandering to the vices and ambitions of worldly leaders or invoking the authority of secular kings and princes.

Protestantism formally begins with the life and ministry of Martin Luther. For convenience of study it will be presented in five periods:

1. The German Reformation, A.D. 1483-1546. From the birth to the death of Luther.

While other factors already named in the preceding chapter entered into the German Reformation, it was under God the masterful monk, Luther, who largely brought the Reformation to success. All agencies without him would probably have come to naught; with him they became mighty weapons offensive and defensive. Luther was born at Eisleben A.D. 1483, and died 1546. He came from a humble home, and was destined by his parents for another vocation than the priesthood. Yet after his college life had ended he was so impressed by the sudden death of a friend that he entered a monastery, was ordained priest in 1507, and assigned to a professorship in the University of Wittenberg. In 1517 he issued his famous Ninety-Five Theses or propositions against the Catholic doctrine of forgiveness of sin and its sale of indulgences through Tetzel and others. He was excommunicated by Pope Leo X. in 1520, and was summoned before the Diet of Worms in 1521 for trial, but refused to recede or recant. He published to Germany three strong addresses entitled "An Address to the German Nobility," the "Babylonian Captivity of the Church," and "Christian Freedom," urging in these an independence of papal rule, denying all sacraments save baptism and the Lord's Supper, and demanding spiritual liberty for all persons. He was greatly aided by the learning of Melancthon, by the friendship and help of Frederick of Saxony, by the Swiss Reformer Zwingli (1484-1530), by John Calvin, the Genevan Reformer (1509-64), and by the famous Erasmus. The final seal of success was put upon the efforts of Luther and these helpers by the "Peace of Augsburg" in 1555, which allowed thenceforth a conditional choice between Romanism and Protestantism and equal protection to both.

The Reformation passed quickly from Germany into Denmark under Christian III.; thence into Norway and Sweden, and to a limited extent into France under Francis I. The city of Geneva in Switzerland became a new center of Protestantism under John Calvin, who was born in France, was famous as a student at the University of Orleans, took part in the opposition to the papacy, wrote with great force his "Institutes of the Christian Religion," became after Luther the head of the Reformation, and was author and apologist of the widespread and long-dominant system of theology known as "Calvinism."

2. The English Reformation, A.D. 1546-1660. From the death of Luther to the death of Cromwell and end of the Commonwealth in England.

The so-called English Reformation was simply an offshoot from that of Germany. Protestantism passed, somewhat in devious ways, into the countries of Europe, and by indirection soon reached England and Scotland. Henry VIII. of England, crafty, lecherous, and treacherous, at first sought to engage Luther in controversy, for which he was dubbed by the pope "defender of the faith." But partly because of a growing independency of England against the Continent, and particularly because of his rupture with the pope over his refusal to divorce Henry's wife, Catherine of Aragon, the King in 1532 issued his declaration of independence of papal authority, and his Parliament in 1534 passed in confirmation the "Act of Supremacy," which declared the king and not the pope to be the supreme head of the English Church. King Edward VI. (1547-53), successor to Henry, was an out-and-out Protestant, and had as his counselors such wise, heroic advisers as Ridley, Latimer, and Hooper. The Book of Common Prayer was put forth in the English language. After Edward's early death came the blotch on the page of England's history, the reign of "Bloody Mary" (1553-55), who restored Catholicism, burned at the stake Ridley, Latimer, Hooper, and Cranmer, and very many others. Elizabeth, the "Good Queen Bess," succeeded Mary, and restored Protestantism during her reign (1558-1603), and maintained England in the forefront of the Reformation for more than forty years. The "Thirty-Nine Articles of Religion" of the English Church, from which our Methodist Articles are abridged, were put in form. The terms "Independent," "Puritan," and "Nonconformist" were applied to the dissenters. Some of the Independents were driven to Holland, and from thence came later to America. King James, whose reign (1603-25) followed Elizabeth's, played fast and loose with all parties, but took time to secure to the English-speaking race the first great and enduring English version of the Scriptures, the Bible most commonly in use in our time and known as the "King James Version." Cromwell's strong leadership (1649-60) made the English "Commonwealth" the chief supporter of Protestantism.

In opposition to the widespread and aggressive system of theology proclaimed by John Calvin there was raised up providentially one who gave to the world a far gentler system, known after his name as "Arminianism," constituting a body of doctrine that lies at the foundation of Methodism, and is fast supplanting the harsher features of Calvinism. James Arminius (1560-1609) was pastor in Amsterdam, then professor at Leyden, and leader of the "Remonstrants." The "Remonstrance" exactly opposed, point by point, the "five points" of Calvin, and maintained: (1) Conditional election; (2) unlimited atonement; (3) partial depravity; (4) resistible grace; (5) possible lapse from grace.

3. The Counter Reformation, A.D. 1540-1648. From the organization of the Jesuits to the Peace of Westphalia.

The Catholic Church, alarmed by the swift spread of Protestantism and the defection of so many of its followers, set up a counter-reformation that did much to arrest the progress of Protestantism in all countries. The method was twofold: to check its growth by any means, fair or foul, whatever; and to institute missionary enterprises for the occupancy of such countries as were yet unreached by Protestantism. The Council of Trent, which met in 1545 and continued several years in session, was a vigorous effort to drive Protestantism from within the Catholic Church. That Council reenacted many of the repulsive features of the Romish Church, and rekindled the bigotry and the hatred of the Church for everything that made for the freedom of the individual conscience. At this time too arose the Order of the Jesuits, 1540, with Ignatius Loyola as its famous or infamous head, the chief working maxim of the Order being expressed in the words, "The end justifies the means," which meant that any command of the decalogue or any law of the State might be broken if only it be done to advance the Catholic Church and the interests of the Order. Not all of the Order were evil-minded men. Francis Xavier, for instance, who gave his life to missionary labor in India, China, and Japan, and some of the nobler Jesuits who came to North America and sought to civilize and evangelize the Indians and hardly less savage white settlers, deserve lasting honor and gratitude.

Along with Jesuitism and as a formidable agent of the counter-reformation was the reorganization of the "Inquisition," of whose earlier cruelties mention has been made. On St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24, 1572, in France, a hundred thousand Huguenots, men, women, and children, were slain in the darkness of the night. Two years later, when Henry IV. came to the throne, by the Edict of Nantes religious liberty and protection was thenceforth promised to French Protestants. Finally, after the "Thirty Years' War" (1618-48), which had as its chief issue the cause of Protestantism, came to an end in the "Treaty of Westphalia," it brought equal rights and liberties to Protestants and Catholics.

4. The Wesleyan Movement, A.D. 1648-1739. From the Treaty of Westphalia to the organization of the English Methodist Church.

One of the darkest pages of modern history is that which pictures England, France, Germany, and even America toward the close of the seventeenth and the first half of the eighteenth centuries, at the time that Wesley and his coadjutors were unwittingly making ready for the greatest revival of religion in the history of Protestantism. Spiritual earnestness seemed to have gone from the churches; morals were at the lowest ebb; not one in five hundred of the common people of England could write his name; drunkenness, gambling, and licentiousness were the trinity of national and popular vices, even among men of the cloth. Christ's name was rarely heard except in blasphemy, and it was deemed the mark of an educated class that it derided religion and made mock of the Bible. Bishop Ryle said of the age: "There was darkness in high places and darkness in low places; darkness in the court, the camp, the parliament, the bar; darkness in country and darkness in town; darkness among the rich and darkness among the poor—a gross, thick, religious and moral darkness; a darkness that might be felt." Pressensé, writing especially of France, his own country, said: "Nothing is so sad as the religious history of this country." "In England and Germany a parching wind blows over hearts and minds." President Dwight, of Yale, writing of America, said: "From France, Germany, and Great Britain the dregs of infidelity were vomited upon us."

At such a time as this the hand of Divine Providence was making ready through the Wesleyan reformation for a mighty religious awakening, an age of spiritual as well as intellectual power and progress not equaled in the history of the Church. Out of the depths had come up before God the cry of the ignorant, the hunger of the lost for something better than the husks of infidelity and the poison of sin, and God answered by giving the world the ministry of a handful of chosen men. "There was a man sent from God whose name was John"—Wesley! In 1739 his first "Methodist Society" was organized in London, and this formal beginning of the "Wesleyan Movement" was made, further details of which will be given in succeeding chapters.

5. American Protestantism, A.D. 1607 to the present time.

Protestantism found a congenial home and larger opportunity for growth in America, which had from the beginning encouraged the coming of the oppressed, whether politically or religiously, from all lands. In no nation have Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile dwelt more at peace or been freer from persecution for the sake of conscience.

The first distinctly Protestant Church to colonize in America was the English Episcopal or Church of England. The Cavaliers who came to Virginia were staunchly Episcopalian, and from 1607 to the present time that Church has maintained its stronghold in the "Old Dominion," as an illustration of the permanency of a church settlement in contrast with a merely social or political settlement. Its first American General Convention was organized in 1785. The Puritans and Pilgrims (or, as now styled, the Congregationalists), first came to Plymouth Rock on the coast of Massachusetts, and later spread throughout New England, where their descendants still maintain a dominating position and influence. The Reformed Dutch Church, now called "The Reformed," came to Manhattan Island, the site of New York City, in 1623. The Baptists, under the leadership of Roger Williams, settled in Rhode Island, where they continue to occupy the foremost place among the Churches. The Lutherans began in New York in 1669. The Presbyterians immigrated to America in large numbers during 1660-88, and in successive later migrations from the Old World. The first Presbyterian General Assembly was held in 1789. The Methodists came from Great Britain to New York and Maryland and began organizing churches in the year 1736. The first Methodist Conference was held in Philadelphia in 1773; and the Methodist Church of America was formally organized in 1784. The first formal Catholic immigration to America was in 1632, under Lord Baltimore, to Maryland; though at other points in the South, notably Santa Fé, St. Augustine, and New Orleans, and along the Mississippi Valley, earlier Catholic settlements had been begun, some of which soon disappeared.

III. METHODISM.

A.D. 1739-1844.

1. The Wesley Family, A.D. 1690-1791.
From the birth of the father to the death of John Wesley.

The ancestry of the Wesley family was distinguished in English history for five hundred years. The name can be traced to William, first Baron of Wellesley, in 1313 A.D. From one branch came Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington. The line is noted for the number of its distinguished preachers and scholars. The grandfather and great-grandfather upon the paternal side, and the grandfather on the mother's side were sturdy Nonconformist preachers, who opposed the doctrines and practices of the English Church.

The Wesley family, from which sprang, in the eighteenth century, our Methodism, had their home in the village rectory of Epworth, Lincoln County, on the eastern coast of England. The family numbered twenty-one—the father and mother, Samuel and Susanna

Wesley, and nineteen children, nine of whom died in infancy. Three sons and seven daughters grew to manhood and womanhood, all of whom, except the eldest, were born at Epworth. The three sons were Samuel, John, and Charles. Samuel, the eldest child, was born in London in 1690, and came to distinction as a man of learning, but was overshadowed by his younger brothers. The seven daughters who grew to womanhood, in order of birth, were: Emilia, Susanna, Mary, Mehetabel, Anne, Martha, Kezia. All except Kezia, who died in early womanhood, married; and all of them inherited the talents of their parents.

Rev. Samuel Wesley, A.M., father, was an English Episcopal clergyman. He was born in 1662, and died in 1735 at Epworth, which he had served as rector for thirty-nine years. He began his ministry in London in 1668, and married Susanna Annesley in that city in 1689. He was a prolific author and poet, especially a writer of hymns. He was the steadfast counselor and helper of his sons, John and Charles, in their efforts at laying the foundation of Methodism. The spirit of the reformer was upon him throughout his laborious and pious life. His last word to Charles, on his deathbed, was: "Be steady. The Christian faith will surely revive in this kingdom."

Mrs. Susanna Wesley, wife of Samuel and mother of John and Charles, is one of the noblest figures in church history. She was born in London in 1669, and was the twenty-fifth child of Rev. Samuel Annesley, D.D., a distinguished Puritan divine, who was known as the "St. Paul of the Nonconformists." Mrs. Wesley's father was nephew to the Earl of Anglesea, and her maternal grandfather, John White, was a leading member of Parliament. She was devoted to her family as few women have been, conducting a daily school for her children with such success that several of them became distinguished scholars. She was accomplished beyond most women. Dr. Adam Clarke said of her: "Such a woman, taking her for all in all, I have not heard of, I have not read of, nor with her equal have I been acquainted."

Rev. John Wesley, A.M., thirteenth child of the Wesley family, the illustrious founder of Methodism, was born in the Epworth Rectory in 1703; and died in the parsonage adjoining the City Road Chapel in London in 1791, in the eighty-eighth year of his life. He was elected Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, at twenty-three, by reason of his brilliant record in the university; was ordained an Episcopal clergyman by Bishop Potter at the age of twenty-two; was three years a missionary to Georgia, chiefly at Savannah, under Governor Oglethorpe; and at the age of thirty-five entered fully upon his long and heroic itinerant ministry in Great Britain as an organizer and preacher of Methodism. He was a minister sixty-five years. He reformed Great Britain, organized Methodism, formulated its constitution, polity, and doctrines, instituted his Conferences, and left many thousands of Methodists in his Churches. He wrote (or compiled) for his Methodist people more than two hundred books and pamphlets. As reformer and apostle, he stands in history second only to St. Paul, whether judged by the extent of his labors or the far-reaching influences of his ministry. His body rests in the little graveyard of City Road Chapel, London, surrounded by the tombs of Clarke, Watson, Benson, Bunting, and others of his helpers. In Westminster Abbey is a tablet to his memory, on which are inscribed his prophetic words: "The world is my parish."

Rev. Charles Wesley, A.M., ranks closely with his brother John in the founding of Methodism. The executive ability of the latter was reënforced by the sacred music which Charles gave to the worship of early Methodism. From the beginning of Methodism to his death he assisted his brother in preaching and in organizing Methodism. Charles Wesley was said by Southey to have written the "finest lyric in the English language." He was the writer of many hymns, which are to be found in the hymnals of the churches. First of all is his hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my soul."

2. Organization of Methodism, A.D. 1739-1791. From the first "Society" in London to John Wesley's death.

John Wesley wrote: "The first rise of Methodism was in November, 1729, when four of us" [the Holy Club, increasing later to thirteen members] "met together at Oxford; the second was at Savannah, Ga., in April, 1736, when twenty or thirty persons met at my house; the last was in London, May, 1739, when forty or fifty of us met together every Wednesday evening."

While these meetings led to Methodism, the real origin was Wesley's formation of the "United Society" in London in 1739. The first Methodist church building was erected by Wesley in Bristol, England, in 1739. The second church building was reared upon the site of the London "Foundry," from which it took its name, in 1740. Connected with it were rooms for Wesley's preachers, an orphans' home, a "book room," a free dispensary, etc. The most famous of English Methodist churches, the "City Road Chapel," London, was built by Wesley in 1778.

The first Methodist week-day school was established by Wesley at Kingswood, England, for the children of the colliers, probably as early as 1739. Wesley himself rode the first regular Methodist circuit in 1742, and then organized circuits for his preachers throughout Great Britain. The first class meeting was held at Bristol, England, in 1742, and grew out of a suggestion to use the class as a means of paying a church debt. The first copy of our "General Rules" was published over the names of John and Charles Wesley in 1743. The first Annual Conference was convened by Wesley at London in 1744, and included six clergymen and four lay preachers. The first "book room," or publishing house, was established by Wesley in the Foundry Church building, London, in 1748. The first "missionary" collection was raised at Newcastle, England, in 1767, for the American Indians. The first Methodist college was built by the Countess of Huntingdon in 1768, at Trevecca, Wales, for young men who, as Methodists, were being persecuted at Oxford University. Wesley instituted and edited the first Methodist periodical, the Arminian Magazine, a monthly, at London, in 1778. The first Bible Society known, the "Naval and Military Bible Society," was organized by Wesley in London in 1779, twenty-five years before the British and Foreign Bible Society began. The first Methodist Sunday school was formed at Bolton, England, in 1785. It was the first in the world to use unpaid teachers.

3. Methodism in America, A.D. 1735-1784. From the first Methodist preaching to the organization of American Methodism.

The Wesleys and Whitefield, along the Atlantic seaboard (1735-37 and later) were the first founders of American Methodism. In 1760 came Philip Embury and Robert Strawbridge, Irish local preachers; Embury organizing Methodism in New York City in 1766, Strawbridge probably earlier in Maryland. Capt. Thomas Webb, a British officer, organized Philadelphia Methodism in 1767. Robert Williams, an English local preacher, was the Virginia pioneer, in 1768. Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmoor were sent from England in 1769 as the first itinerants. William Watters, of Maryland, became the first native itinerant in 1773. Thomas Rankin, sent over by Wesley, held the first Annual Conference in Philadelphia in 1773. Jesse Lee, of Virginia, planted Methodism in New England in 1789; Thomas Ware, of New Jersey, in Tennessee and North Carolina about the same time; William Losee, of New York, in Upper Canada in 1791; Tobias Gibson, of South Carolina, in the Southwest Territory, around Natchez, in 1799; Jesse Walker, of Tennessee, beginning in 1805, organized Methodism in St. Louis and later in Chicago.

Among the many historic Methodist churches of America, the following exhibit the progress of the Church: "Sam's Creek," Maryland, erected about 1766, of which Bishop Asbury wrote, "Here Mr. Strawbridge formed the first society in Maryland—and America;" John Street Church, New York City, built in 1768, oldest in the North;

"St. George's," the historic center of Philadelphia Methodism, built in 1769; "Lovely Lane Chapel," Baltimore, 1774, in which, in 1784, the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized; "Barrett's Chapel," Delaware, 1780, in which Coke and Asbury planned the organization of American Methodism; the church near Lexington, Ky., 1787, in which Asbury held the first Conference west of the Alleghenies; the "Blue Meetinghouse," Charleston, S. C., 1787, the first Methodist Church in that city of Wesleyan ministry; the Portsmouth Church (near Portsmouth, Ohio), 1801, the oldest in the Northwest Territory; the "Spring Hill Church," near Natchez, Miss., 1807, oldest in the Southwest; the "McKendree Church," near Jackson, Mo., 1807, the first west of the Mississippi, in which four pioneer Conferences were held; the "Old Tobacco House," of Washington, D. C., which served as a meetinghouse for Washington Methodism from 1807 to 1811. President Jefferson attended services in this building.

4. The American Organization, A.D. 1784-1844. From the organization at Baltimore to the division at New York.

Methodism in America was formally or ganized as "the Methodist Episcopal Church" in December, 1784, at Lovely Lane Chapel, Baltimore, by the "Christmas Conference" convened by Coke and Asbury, with sixty out of eighty-three traveling preachers in attendance. Coke was appointed bishop by Wesley, and Asbury was elected bishop by this Conference. The first regular General Conference after this organization was held at Baltimore in 1792, and the third, also at Baltimore, in 1796, at which six Annual Conferences were erected, as follows: the "New England," the "Philadelphia," the "Baltimore," the "Virginia," the "South Carolina," and the "Western." Not until 1808 was a native bishop, William McKendree, of Virginia, elected. Among the institutions of Methodism established during this period were the "Book Concern," in 1789, under John Dickins, "book steward;" the Methodist Magazine, in 1797; the "Missionary Society," organized in 1819, Bishop McKendree the first president; the "Sunday School Society," in 1827, the first of its kind in America. In 1828 the Methodists of Canada, upon their request, were set apart as an independent body. In 1844, upon the issue of slavery, the Church by vote of the General Conference was divided, and the Methodists of the South organized, in 1845, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

IV.

SOUTHERN METHODISM.

A.D. 1845-1909.

1. Southern Methodist Pioneers, A.D. 1760-1850. From Strawbridge to Jesse Boring.

Every Methodist should hold in reverence the heroic men who took their lives in their hands and planted our Southern Methodism. It is a fact worthy of note that much of American Methodism, in all its sections, was founded by men from the South. After Strawbridge, Williams, Watters, Owen, and the earlier company of pioneers, came the following native leaders:

Along the Atlantic Seaboard, beginning about 1764, Francis Poythress and Philip Bruce, in Virginia; Thomas Humphries and Isaac Smith, in the Carolinas; Hope Hull and Richard Ivey, in Georgia.

In the Holston Country were John Tunnell and Thomas Ware.

In the Cumberland Country, from the Ohio River to the Gulf, the chief pioneers were: Benjamin Ogden, Peter Massie, William Burke, and John Page.

In the lower Mississippi Valley were Tobias Gibson, Richmond Nolly, and William Winans; in the upper "Valley" were Jesse Walker, James Gwin, and John Travis.

Among the Methodist preachers who first carried the gospel to the Southern tribes of Indians were William Capers, Isaac Smith, and Alexander Talley.

As early as 1829 the South Carolina Conference, followed by other Conferences, began missions among the negro slaves; and among the foremost founders of negro missions were James O. Andrew and William Capers. On the latter's tomb are the words: "Founder of Missions to Slaves."

In the then Far West, which stretched from Texas to the Pacific, were Martin Ruter and Robert Alexander in Texas, and on the Pacific Coast, Jesse Boring.

Four "mother" Conferences originally included the entire South—the "Baltimore," the "Virginia," the "South Carolina," and the "Western," which last extended from the Lakes to the Gulf, west of the Alleghanies. In 1796 the General Conference organized definitely these Conferences and fixed their bounds. All later Southern Conferences, as we now have them, have grown from these four "mother" Conferences.

Of the historic churches of Southern Methodism "Lovely Lane Chapel," Baltimore, Md., stands first as the place where American Methodism was formally organized. "Ellis's Preaching House," in Sussex County, Va., is noted as the site of three successive pioneer Annual Conferences, in 1782, 1783, and 1784. "Cumberland Street Church," Charleston, S. C., was the first Methodist Church to erect "galleries for the slaves." "Masterson's," near Lexington, Ky., was the first Methodist church west of the Alleghanies. The "Stone Church," Nashville, Tenn., was built near the "Square," as the oldest, and here, on October 19, 1800, Asbury, Whatcoat, and McKendree preached all on one day. "Midway," in Amite County, Miss., was the mother of many famous Western standard bearers. "Knobb Chapel," New Orleans, on Bienville Street, was served by William Winaus, first New Orleans pastor. The first church in Texas was built at San Augustine under Ruter. "Union Street Church," in Petersburg, Va., now occupied by the Colored Methodist Episcopal people, to whom it was given, is the famous church in which our first General Conference met in 1846. Our oldest and most noted pioneer

Pacific church was built at San José, Cal. The "Wesley Monumental," in Savannah, Ga., the gift of all Methodism, fittingly commemorates the origin and the founder of American Methodism.

2. Southern Methodist Growth, A.D. 1846-1909. From the first General Conference to the present time.

Southern Methodism was instituted by its first General Conference at Petersburg, Va., May, 1846, with sixteen Conferences, 455,217 members, and two bishops. This Conference began the work of foreign missions, extended later as follows: China, 1846; Mexico, 1871; Brazil, 1873; Japan, 1886; Korea, 1896; Cuba, 1898. In 1854 the United States Supreme Court decreed a division of Church property between the Methodist Episcopal Church and Southern Methodism. In 1870 lay delegates were admitted to General and Annual Conferences; and the Colored M. E. Church, under our sanction, and with two colored bishops, was organized from our negro members. From the sixteen Annual Conferences of 1846, forty-five, including eight Mission Conferences, have grown. Thirty bishops have been elected, ten of whom at this date (1909) are living.

Taking the statistics of 1907 as a guide, the total number of traveling, or "itinerant," preachers of our Southern Methodism is 7,188, which includes bishops, presiding elders, connectional officers, and missionaries in foreign fields. The number of pastoral charges—that is, stations or circuits—is 5,642. As there are 1,725,467 members in our Church, this would give an average of 240 members to the preacher. Our Church has 10 living bishops, nearly 300 presiding elders, about 30 connectional or general officers (including editors in charge of Conference papers), 281 foreign missionary workers, 872 supernumerary and superannuated preachers (chiefly the latter). The number of local preachers is 4,703. This gives a grand total of 11,831 Southern Methodist preachers.

3. Our Bishops, A.D. 1844-1909. From the division to 1909.

Including Soule and Andrew, who were received as its first bishops by the first General Conference of 1846, thirty bishops have served our Southern Methodism to date of 1909. Of these, twenty have died. Bascom was elected in May and died the September following, holding the office about three months. Parker and Haygood served only three and six years respectively. Tigert was ordained in May and died in November. Haygood was one of the very few in Church history to decline election to the high office, yet he was again elected at an ensuing Conference. Galloway was thirty-seven when elected; Early was sixty-eight, the maximum in age at election.

Counting our line of bishops from Coke (1784) to Janes (1844), the last bishop elected by the undivided Church, and then from Soule, the first bishop of the M. E. Church, South, to Atkins, elected in 1906, the total in whose bishopric we have direct part is forty-two. Of these, the average age at election was forty-eight years, and their average years in office about twenty-one.

4. Southern Methodist Boards, A.D. 1846-1909.—The Board of Missions is the Parent Board, and was organized in 1846, with office in the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Its executive officers are a Secretary-in-Chief and several Assistant Secretaries, together with office Secretary and Treasurer. It operates mission stations in China, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Korea, Cuba, and has charge of work in the Mission Conferences in the United States. It supports twenty foreign schools and five hospitals and dispensaries. Its organ is Go Forward.

The Sunday School Board was organized as now in 1870. It is managed by a General Sunday School Board, of which the Sunday School Editor is ex officio Chairman, and aided by Annual Conference Boards. Its officers are the General Sunday School Board, the Sunday School Editor and Assistant Editor, and the Superintendent of Training Work. It supervises and directs all home and foreign Sunday school work, and prepares and issues all Sunday school literature, and also directs the teacher-training work of the Church. The number of Sunday schools reported in 1907 was 14,955; of officers and teachers, 113,654; of Sunday school pupils, 1,127,359.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions was organized in 1878. Its executive officers are the Corresponding Secretary and Assistant Secretaries, the Treasurer, and the Recording Secretary. Its papers are the Woman's Missionary Advocate and the Little Worker. This Board operates in the same countries with the Parent Board. It conducts or aids seventy-five schools; also two hospitals.

The Board of Church Extension, organized in 1882, looks after the purchase of lots and buildings for Church or parsonage uses. Its office is in Louisville, Ky., and the work is under a Corresponding Secretary. Since organized it has aided about 5,000 churches with loans.

The Woman's Board of Home Missions was organized in 1886, and helps to build parsonages, maintains mission stations among our foreign population in the United States, and conducts city and rescue missions and schools. Its executive officers are a General Secretary, Associate Secretary, Recording Secretary, and Treasurer. Its official paper is Our Homes. It maintains 14 schools and 24 city mission centers.

The Epworth League Board, organized in 1890, is directed by the Corresponding Secretary and Assistant Secretary, and has as its official organ the Epworth Era. It supervises and assists the organized League work of the Church, and provides and directs "Culture Courses"—biblical, literary, and historical—for the Epworth Leagues. In 1907 there were in operation 3,663 Epworth Leagues and 127,924 members.

The Board of Education, organized in 1894, supervises our system of church schools. Its officers are a General Board, a Corresponding Secretary and Assistant Secretary, and a "Commission of Ten" to unify and fix standards. The system of schools at present includes: One central university, 15 colleges, 47 unclassified institutions, 52 academies, 12 schools not meeting requirements for academies, 2 special institutions, 5 schools for negroes, and 59 institutions in foreign fields under control of Mission Boards. The Board also has in charge Paine Institute and Lane College for negroes.

The Advocate Family is an important auxiliary to the Church, both spiritually and educationally. It has 16 papers serving our Southern Methodism, chief of which is the Christian Advocate, the connectional organ, the editor of which is elected by the General Conference. The editors of other Advocates are chosen by the patronizing Conferences. The other members of the Advocate family are: The Alabama Advocate, the Arkansas Methodist, the Central Methodist, the Southern Methodist, the Baltimore, New Orleans, North Carolina, Raleigh, Southern, St. Louis, Texas, Wesleyan, West Virginia, Western, and Pacific Advocates.

The Methodist Review is edited by the Book Editor and assistant, who also edit the General Minutes, the Book of Discipline, the Church Hymnal, the Course of Study, and the Church Catechisms.

The Publishing House, founded in 1854, is located at Nashville, Tenn., with branch houses at Dallas, Tex., and Shanghai, China. Its directing Agents, two in number, are elected quadrennially by the General Conference.

5. World-Wide Methodism. Of the twenty-eight bodies or divisions of world-wide Methodism, eleven are in foreign countries and seventeen in America. Of these, only one body, the Calvinistic branch, chiefly in Wales, differs in doctrine. In polity there are mainly minor differences.

SECTION TWO.

THE DOCTRINES OF THE
METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

BY REV. WILBUR F. TILLET, D.D.,
Dean of the Theological Faculty of Vanderbilt University.

V.

DISTINGUISHING FEATURES.

METHODISM represents a distinct system of Christian doctrine, and also a type of Church polity. Methodists are not one the world over in their ecclesiastical polity: some are episcopal, some presbyterial, and some congregational. But all Methodists are practically a unit the world over in the type of theology which they hold. Most of the cardinal doctrines of Methodism are held in common with all evangelical Christian Churches. Such, for example, are the inspiration and divine authority of the Holy Scriptures, the Trinity of the Godhead, the divinity of Christ, the fall of man and the universal sinfulness of the race, justification by faith, the necessity of regeneration, the future and eternal existence of all men after death, and many other similar doctrines of the highest significance.

But there are certain other doctrines which, though not held exclusively by Methodists, have at least been more strongly emphasized in the faith and preaching of Methodism than in any other branch of the Christian Church. Among these may be mentioned the following: the moral free agency and accountability of man, the unlimited atonement of Christ, the witness of the Spirit testifying to the regenerate man of his acceptance with God, the possibility of apostasy, and the attainability of entire holiness in this life.

Methodism has been the instrument in the hands of God of saving during the century and a half of its existence not less perhaps than fifteen to twenty millions of immortal souls. This result, which is without a precedent in the history of the Christian Church, is to be attributed in no small degree to the intensely earnest and practical character of its theology. "It was not new doctrine but new life that the Methodists sought for themselves and for others," says Bishop McTyeire in the opening sentence of his "History of Methodism." But the history of the Christian Church has established the fact that progress in the spiritual life and maintenance of sound doctrine are vitally related to each other.

The doctrinal system of Methodism is sometimes designated as "Arminian theology."

This designation connects it with the name of James Arminius (1560-1609), a noted theologian of Holland. As Martin Luther and his fellow-reformers, although reared in the Church of Rome, were led by their enlightened convictions to protest against what they considered the corrupt practices and false teachings of this Church, and were for that reason called Protestants, so James Arminius and his associates, although first instructed in the strict teachings of high Calvinism, felt compelled to utter a remonstrance against certain extreme Calvinistic doctrines concerning predestination, election, reprobation, etc., and were for that reason called Remonstrants. The celebrated "five points" of Calvinism, setting forth the peculiar and distinctive doctrines of that system of theology, were offset by the no less distinctive "five points" of Arminianism, viz.: (1) Conditional election—that is, God elected to salvation those who, he foresaw, would freely repent of their sins and believe in Christ, and to reprobation those whose willful impenitence and unbelief he foresaw. (2) Jesus Christ died alike for all men, but only those who repent and believe will secure the saving benefits of his atoning death. (3) The ability of fallen man to repent and believe is of grace and not of nature, and spiritual renewal or regeneration is entirely of the Spirit's operation. (4) Nevertheless divine grace and the influence of the Spirit are not, as Calvinism affirms, irresistible; but may be resisted by man, who is a moral free agent, and who, though he may be convicted of sin against his will, is never converted against his will. (5) The possibility of a truly regenerated man falling away from his saved estate and being finally lost was first left an open question, but was soon decided, as the logic of the system required that it should be, in the affirmative.

The doctrinal system of Methodism is also designated as "Wesleyan theology." This designation associates it with the names of John and Charles Wesley. John Wesley (1703-1791) was perhaps the greatest reformer, preacher, and evangelist that has ever appeared in England. Methodism is but one of the many results that have come from his life and labors. John Wesley's theology was intensely evangelical and practical, and, like that of the apostle Paul, was to a large extent colored by his own religious experience. He accepted the system formulated by James Arminius and the Remonstrants of Holland, in all the points wherein that system differed from Calvinism. But he did something more for it than accept it. Arminian theology, as it was formulated by the Remonstrants, was, as an intellectual system of doctrine, logical, self-consistent, and true; but it was cold; it was lacking in the warmth and intensity of spiritual life; it needed to be quickened by the faith and the fire of an evangelical experience. This is exactly what John Wesley did with it and for it. He carried it, as it were, to the altar, and there it was baptized with the Holy Ghost; and, surcharged with evangelical life and converting power, it was sent forth upon its world-wide mission of evangelization. In Methodism we find the doctrines of Arminius put into practice as living truths, made matters of personal religious experience, and utilized as mighty spiritual forces for saving souls and spreading the kingdom of Christ. In Wesleyan theology the intensive power of the gospel to save each individual from all sin is as much emphasized as is its extensive power to save all sinners, whoever they may be and whenever and wherever they may live.

In 1784 John Wesley reduced the thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England to twenty-five in number, and abridged and otherwise altered some of those which he retained. These he sent to America by Thomas Coke, whom he had ordained bishop, and they were accepted as the general creed of Episcopal Methodism in America. They have ever since occupied a foremost place among our doctrinal standards.

John Wesley's sermons also have always been numbered among the leading "doctrinal standards" of Methodism. They may be lacking here and there in the accuracy and uniform self-consistency of doctrinal statement that we have a right to expect in works of dogmatic theology, but what they lack in these respects they more than gain in the spiritual power that belongs to them as sermons glowing with a living Christian experience and setting forth the great truths that pertain to man's salvation. Richard Watson's "Theological Institutes" may not be altogether up to date, but they have in them a theology that is well adapted to the world's conversion and upbuilding in the spiritual life. Adam Clarke, the first great representative commentator of Methodism, showed by his able and scholarly expositions of the Holy Scriptures how thoroughly faithful to the Bible were the doctrinal teachings of Methodism.

Charles Wesley, the poet-preacher and theologian, rendered a service to the theology of Methodism scarcely less important and far-reaching than that of his brother John. He gave happy expression in verse to all the great doctrines of Christianity, and he was especially happy in the hymns which he wrote embodying the more distinctive doctrines of his faith. These hymns became at once immensely popular with the people, and gave wings, as it were, to the doctrines they embodied. A sermon put into a song doubles its power for good. Nor did these doctrinal hymns of Charles Wesley simply meet a local and temporary need; they have an abiding value, and have carried, in the most effective manner possible, the doctrines they contain into the hymnals of all Christian Churches the world over. While John Wesley's hymns are not numerous, and are mostly translations from other languages, they are in no way inferior to those of Charles Wesley either in poetic merit or doctrinal value. It is in portraying those doctrines which are matters of religious experience that the Wesleyan hymns are richest both in variety and in intensity of utterance. The great reformation in Germany in the sixteenth century owed much to the fact that Luther was a poet as well as a preacher, and embodied all his leading doctrines in simple and popular hymns that were adapted to the common people as well as in sermons and theses that were adapted to the learned. But the Wesleyan reformation owed even more to its hymns. "Let me write the songs of a people," said one, "and I care not who may write their laws; I will govern them." "Let me write the hymns of a Church," said another, "and I care not who may write her creeds and ponderous volumes of theology; I will determine the faith of her membership." The Methodist hymn book has always been reckoned among the doctrinal standards of the Church. It has ever been one of the most effective of the agencies employed for indoctrinating the people in that type of evangelical Christian faith which is known the world over as Methodist theology.

But the designation of Methodist theology as "Arminian" and "Wesleyan" must not be misunderstood. Methodist theology is first of all and above all biblical. Every evangelical Church recognizes the Bible as the source and foundation of its theology. It is after all simply a question of the proper interpretation of the Bible. Calvinism is a logical and self-consistent system of doctrine which finds its starting point and its determining principle in the eternal decrees of Jehovah, and interprets the entire revelation contained in the Bible in accordance with that doctrine. Methodism also has a logical and self-consistent system of doctrine which in like manner is based upon the Bible, but it finds its starting point and determining principle in two doctrines that mutually necessitate and support each other—viz., the moral free agency of man and the unlimited atonement of Christ; and we may say that every other doctrine of Methodist theology is a logical outcome of these two doctrines. Methodism, therefore, claims that its theology is the theology of the New Testament, the theology of Christ and of Paul. It is that simple and primitive type of theology which began to be preached in its completed form on the day of Pentecost, and has never since been without its true witnesses in any age of the Church's history. It has needed, however, to be restated and reformulated ever and anon. Such was the service rendered by James Arminius and John Wesley, and by others before and since their day.

VI.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

WHAT doctrine does Methodism hold concerning the Holy Scriptures? This is best answered by first asking another question: What does the Bible teach concerning itself? The Bible teaches, we answer, that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." It teaches that "prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" and that "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Moses is represented as having received directly from God the Ten Commandments, which are with us to this day, and whose high moral character well befits their claim of a divine origin. "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying," is the preface with which the prophets begin their messages. These remarkable claims demand of us that we make serious inquiry as to their import. If this Book is what it claims to be, no man can afford to ignore or neglect its teachings. "These [things] are written," says St. John, in concluding the fourth Gospel, and it is in a sense equally true of all Scripture, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name."

These quotations cover the three main questions which we need to ask concerning the Bible, and suggest the proper answers to them: (1) Where did the Bible come from? We answer that it is divine in its origin, in that its cardinal and distinguishing doctrines were revealed by God to man. (2) How did God reveal these facts and doctrines? We answer: Through certain chosen men whom the Holy Spirit inspired as trustworthy organs for the communication of the divine will. (3) What purpose are these inspired Scriptures designed to fill in the divine economy as it concerns man? We answer: They are a divinely provided guide for man in all matters of a moral and spiritual nature, especially such as pertain to his faith and conduct here and his life in the world to come. Thus we have the three theological terms, revelation, inspiration, and the canon, answering the three questions as to the whence, the how, and the what of the Holy Scriptures.

God reveals something of himself and of his will through nature and providence, but this general revelation has always proved inadequate to meet man's spiritual needs, being insufficient to impart a true and satisfactory knowledge of God, of the way of salvation, and of the immortality and destiny of the soul. That religious knowledge which fallen man needed but could not secure from nature, God has supplied in a supernatural manner by revelation. It is these divine or supernaturally revealed facts and truths which, as collected together within the Bible, constitute it a divine Book. Nevertheless, the Bible is not wholly divine; it is rather divine-human, for much that is contained in it is human in its origin and did not need to be divinely revealed. This unrevealed portion of the Bible is, in fact, the larger portion. It is, however, a faithful and trustworthy record, quite as much as is that portion which records the divine revelations. The human elements furnish the literary and historical framework for holding the divinely revealed truths. The divine revelations contained in the Bible are of transcendent importance, and so far give character to the volume as a whole that it is common, and not inappropriate, to designate it as the Book of Revelation.

What is the evidence that the Bible contains supernatural revelations? The divine authority of the Bible depends upon the truth of the claim that it contains supernatural revelations; and if this be true, the claim ought to be supported by supernatural evidence. And it is. The prophets who claimed to have received divine revelations proved the truth of their assertions by working miracles. When Moses, for example, announced to the children of Israel in Egypt that he had received a revelation and a command from God in the desert, they immediately and very naturally demanded proof of such a claim. The God who had given the revelation had provided for this reasonable demand, and empowered him to work miracles. In some instances the vindication of the divine claim on the part of the prophet was found in the fulfillment of predictions which he uttered concerning the future. In yet other instances the revelations announced by the prophets as coming from God were self-evidencing—that is, were in their nature so thoroughly accordant with the moral character of God and man's religious needs that they carried their own evidence in them, and hence did not need to be supported by miracles or predictions. Our reason, therefore, for believing that the Bible contains divine revelations is found in part in the miracles the prophets and the apostles wrought, in part in the fulfillment of their predictions of future events, in part in the intrinsic moral excellence of the doctrines taught, and finally in the uplifting and ennobling moral influence the Bible has had upon the character of all the nations and individuals that have believed and followed its teachings.

But the passages of Scripture which were quoted above seem to teach not only that God has made revelations of his will from time to time, but that it was his will that a trustworthy record should be made of these revelations. They imply that the Holy Spirit exercised an influence upon those who wrote the books of Holy Scripture such as cannot be claimed for the writers of any other books. This special influence of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of the biblical writers was designed to prevent them from making hurtful mistakes in the statements they should give of the great moral and spiritual truths of religion, and in an important sense to make their words God's words, and their book to be God's Book. This is what is meant by saying that the biblical writers were "inspired." St. Peter speaks of a certain scripture "which the Holy Ghost spake by the mouth of David." The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews uses interchangeably the expressions "the Holy Ghost testifieth" and "one [that is, the writer] in a certain place testifieth." In other words, what the inspired writer says God says.

To affirm that the biblical writers were inspired does not mean that they lost their human individuality and freedom, and were turned into machines. The inspired prophets and apostles were not shorthand reporters. Only in a few instances do they tell us that they wrote down the very "words which the Holy Ghost teacheth." In the Ten Commandments we have the very words of God. But as a rule the expression of the thought, even when it was revealed, was determined by the individual writer, whose style and other mental peculiarities may be seen everywhere in his writings. There may be several accounts of the same events, all differing in the words used, and yet all be equally true and accurate. The great purpose of inspiration is to secure truth in the records, not uniformity and sameness of statement. The four evangelists record very much the same events, and yet they differ both in literary style and, as a rule, in the words used; but all are equally true and equally inspired. The various books of the Bible are as genuinely human and as thoroughly marked by the individual characteristics of their human authors as if they had been written by uninspired men. To recognize the distinctly human element in the Bible is not to detract from its moral value, but rather to add to its value for man's guidance, even as the humanity of Christ makes him a better Saviour than if he had possessed no human nature at all. Truth is none the less true because uttered by human lips. Christ is none the less divine because he had a genuinely human nature.

But the strongest of all arguments in proof of the doctrine of biblical inspiration is the manner in which Christ refers to the Scriptures, and the absolute divine authority which he attributes to them. To him and to the apostles they were none other than God's own words. Our Lord made distinct reference to David's inspiration when he asks: "How then doth David in spirit call him Lord?" If the Old Testament was written by divinely inspired men and possessed of divine authority, how much more the New, which was the full and final expression of the revealed will of God! We believe in the New Testament chiefly because of what it tells us of Christ; and in the Old Testament chiefly because of what Christ tells us of it—tells us by the way he used it and appealed to it as the very word of God. Perhaps the best possible definition which we can give of the Holy Scriptures is drawn from their relation to Christ, thus: "By the Holy Scriptures we mean, (1) those ancient sacred books of the Jewish Church which Christ and his inspired apostles used and appealed to as of divine authority; and (2) those sacred books of the New Testament which set forth the life and teachings of our Lord, and which were written by or under the direction of his apostles." Christianity believes in the Person first, and in the Book second. It is the divine-human Person that makes the Book, not the divine-human Book that makes the Person. Christianity could live without a Book, but it could not live—indeed, it could not be at all—without the Person of Christ.

The Canon of Holy Scripture, then, is nothing more nor less than that collection of sacred books which were written under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and the primary object of which was to meet man's moral and religious needs. They incidentally contain history, biography, chronology, philosophy, science, etc., but they were not written primarily to teach any of these things, and the entire accuracy of their statements concerning questions of this kind is a matter of absolute insignificance as compared with the great moral principles and spiritual truths that are the distinguishing features of the Christian religion. It is in reference to these truths that we appeal to it as the divine and authoritative word of God.

The word "canon" means, literally, a rule; and the Holy Scriptures are a canon in that they are a divine rule of faith and practice, a standard of doctrine and ethics. The word "canonical" is also applied to the Holy Scriptures to distinguish them from books which were not regarded as inspired and of divine authority, such as the Old Testament Apocrypha.

There is every reason to believe that the Old Testament Scriptures, as we now have them, are substantially identical with the Scriptures which Christ and the apostles used. These Scriptures of the old covenant are not called old because they are antiquated and obsolete; for, although the dispensation for which they were immediately written has long since come to an end, having served its purpose, these ancient Scriptures have an abiding significance and value. A large part of the Old Testament is occupied exclusively with setting forth the ritual and ceremonial law of the Jewish Church, which is not now binding and has never been since the day of Pentecost; but, so far as they embody God's moral law, they are of as much authority now as they ever were, and are of equal authority with the New Testament. Inasmuch, however, as transitory and now obsolete precepts are intermingled with those which are of perpetual obligation, the Old Testament must be read and interpreted with intelligent discrimination.

All inspired books are of importance, but some are of more importance than others. That portion of the Bible which transcends in moral value all other parts of the Bible is the four Gospels. Christianity is a historical religion. Its Founder is a Person who lived at a definite time and place, and the Gospels purport to give a trustworthy record of the leading facts of his life, his sayings and doings. The whole question as to whether or not there is a supernatural religion in the world depends upon the historical trustworthiness of these Gospel records. If any records in the literature of the world are entitled to credence, these surely are. Paul probably wrote his Epistles many years before the Gospels were written. Four of the Pauline Epistles (Romans, First and Second Corinthians, and Galatians) are universally admitted by well-nigh all classes of theologians and critics to be genuine, and to come from about the middle of the first century. These Epistles establish the fact beyond a doubt that Christ was at that time regarded as a divine-human Being, who had died upon the cross and had risen again from the dead. These are the main facts of supernatural religion—viz., the incarnation of Christ and his resurrection from the dead. If these are true, the Gospels are fully confirmed, and the existence of a supernatural religion, with its supernatural Christ, is established. This, we saw at the outset, is the supreme and final end for which the Scriptures exist: “That ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.”

VII.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF MAN.

IF God is the chief object of divine revelation, man, we may say, is the principal subject of revelation. The inspired Scriptures are addressed to man and are largely about himself, his nature and needs, his duty and destiny. The Scriptures give us four views of man: first, primitive man, in his unfallen state, as God made him, innocent and pure; second, man in his fallen state, as he made himself, sinful and depraved; third, man in a state of gracious ability, as Christ made him by his redeeming work; fourth, man in a state of regeneration or restoration to the divine image, as the Holy Spirit is ready to make all those who come unto God by Christ. In this chapter we shall consider man as originally created and as fallen.

The only rational account we have of man's origin, that in Genesis, makes him to be the last and highest product of creation; and this is equally true whether the inspired narrative be explained literally or as truth taught in allegorical and symbolical form. This highest of God's earthly creatures is possessed of two natures, physical and spiritual, in one personality. Man is allied to lower animals in his physical nature, but to the angelic world in his spirit. His material or physical nature is sometimes called flesh and sometimes body. His immaterial nature is designated sometimes as soul and sometimes as spirit. It is in man's immaterial or spiritual nature that we find the real seat of manhood. It is this spiritual nature that gives him his consciousness and reason, his intellect, sensibilities, and will, his conscience, his capacity for sin on the one hand and for holiness on the other, his capacity for the worship and service of God, his likeness to God, his divine sonship and immortality. Man is represented in the Bible as having been created in the image of God, endowed with reason and moral free agency, placed under moral laws, obedience to which results in holy character, and disobedience to which is sin and results in sinful character. His life here is probationary in that his character as formed here determines his destiny in the world to come.

The supreme purpose of God in creating man seems to have been to make possible the highest ideal of creaturely holiness and happiness. There was need in the universe of a creature whose highest happiness would be secured by his highest holiness; and this holiness, in turn, would secure the highest glory of the Creator. The holiness of a free being is a higher type of holiness than any kind of holiness that might characterize a being who should be necessitated by the will of the Creator to be and do what he is and does, and the former holiness would glorify the Creator far more than the latter possibly could. The latter could glorify God only as a house does its builder, while the former would glorify him as a dutiful and obedient son does his father, a righteous citizen his ruler, or a brave soldier his leader. But in order for God to make holiness possible it was absolutely necessary for him to make sin possible. But while God made sin possible by creating free moral agents and placing them in a state of probation, he did not make sin actual. It was man, not God, who made sin actual. God, we may say, would not have made sin possible if he could have secured the highest ideal of holiness in man without such possibility. But there are some things which even omnipotence cannot do; it cannot do an impossible thing, and the creation and probation of a free being who cannot sin are an impossibility. But the highest ideal of the Creator as embodied in man, the moral free agent, would have been realized if sin had forever remained simply a possibility and had never become an actuality. That ideal has been realized in one, and only one—the Son of Man. But the first Adam was as free from sin when he came from the hands of his Creator as was the infant born of the Virgin. The first man was under no necessity to sin. He was free.

We may say, then, that while man's first estate was thus one of innocence and purity, two alternatives were before him as a moral free agent: holiness and sin. But the life and probation of the first pair had not been of long duration before, by an abuse of their moral freedom, innocence and purity gave place to sin and guilt. The history of mankind, from that time on, is the history of a fallen and sinful race. The "fall of man" is a phrase which is commonly used in theology to describe man's loss of original righteousness and his coming under the dominion of sin. The fall of Adam is regarded as the fall of the race, because of the fact that he was not only the natural head, but in such a sense the federal head and moral representative of the race, which was seminally in him, that certain consequences of his sin were entailed upon them. But Adam's relation to the universal sinfulness of the race is a matter of secondary importance as compared to the undeniable fact that all men are by nature sinful and stand in need of a Saviour.

The Bible uses various expressions to define the nature of sin. The essence of sin is selfishness, setting one's own will in opposition to the will of the Creator, or willful transgression of the law of God. Sin is "enmity against God." The sinner is one who has dethroned God, the rightful ruler, from his seat of authority in the heart, and has set himself up as ruler instead, and the result is a state of internal moral anarchy. The fact that the will of the creature so often manifests its disobedience to the commands of God, by yielding to the solicitations of the fleshly or animal nature, has given rise to calling sin "the flesh" or "the carnal mind." The seat of sin, however, is in the inner spiritual man, in the heart, and not in the flesh. Outward acts are sins only in so far as they are expressions of inner volitions, dispositions, and states. "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts." If the tree is evil, its fruit must be evil. The look of the eye that comes from lust in the heart does not need the outward act to make it sin. The decision to commit murder, or even the hate of the heart that may lead to murderous volition, makes one a murderer in the eyes of God. There are different degrees of guilt. There may be sins of culpable thoughtlessness and ignorance, sins of surprise in which one is overtaken in a fault, sins of deliberate choice and malice aforethought, sins that involve the breaking of a solemn covenant, and sins against the Holy Ghost, in which the sinner, by persistence in willful wrongdoing, passes beyond the possibility of being renewed again unto repentance, and hence beyond the possibility of pardon. (Matt. v. 28, xv. 19; 1 John iii. 4; Rom. viii. 6-8; Mark iii. 29; Heb. vi. 6.)

But sin is not only a voluntary transgression of the law of God; it is also, according to the definition of St. John, any want of conformity to that law. Sins often repeated beget a habit of sin. Sinful habits long continued in beget sinful character. Sin in the first instance always involves a consciously evil act, but the oftener a man sins the more does sin become to him the law of life, and the less does the element of consciousness enter into his sinning. Whenever a man thus, by long-continued violations of God's law, reaches the point where conscience ceases to rebuke him for his violation of God's law—where he ceases to feel painfully the guilt of his sins, where sin has become the law of life to him, has become, as it were, the natural thing to do—then he has become possessed of a sinful character. This is sometimes called acquired depravity, as distinct from voluntary sin, or the sin of nature, as distinct from willful sin. Sinful character is the result of sinful volitions and acts, but when character is formed it becomes a predisposing cause of the volitions and acts that result—that is, a man does not come from the hand of his Creator a bad man; he becomes a bad man only as a result of his own evil volitions and evil deeds; but when he has thus become a bad man, then the reverse is true, and we may say of such a one that he does evil because he is a bad man. We thus see what willful sin is, and also its relation to moral depravity and to sinful character.

But there is such a thing as inherited depravity as well as acquired depravity. It is commonly called original sin, and may be defined as that “corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby he is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually." That all men do from their very infancy manifest a tendency to do wrong rather than to do right; that children left to themselves as they grow up will do that which is morally wrong rather than that which is right—is one of the most undeniable of all moral facts. If the Church creeds and the biblical writers were silent about it, we still could not fail to recognize this universal sinfulness of man. As this bias to sin characterizes man from his very infancy, it may reasonably be inferred that it is inherited. Hence it is sometimes called "birth sin." Many think it unfortunate that it ever should have been called "sin" or "guilt;" think that these terms should have been reserved for willful sin. Methodists do not believe that the guilt of Adam's sin was imputed or charged to his descendants in any sense except that certain consequences of his wrongdoing (as is more or less true of every parent's wrongdoing) were entailed upon his offspring. Nor does the inheriting of a bias toward sin involve any culpability or guilt whatever until a child arrives at an age of moral accountability and can bring the sinward tendencies of his nature under the dominion of grace, but refuses to do so. Then he may justly be held responsible and punishable for it and its consequences.

Another phrase that is used in this connection, and is much misunderstood, is "total depravity." It is a term that was coined by theologians who took a view of original sin and its effect that Methodists do not indorse. This term and also that of "original guilt" are quite consistent with the cardinal doctrines of Augustinian theology, but whenever they appear in Methodist theology (as they sometimes do) they call for definition and explanation. There is, as we have seen, both inherited and acquired depravity. We believe that a man may, by persistent, willful sin, acquire a character that is totally depraved. But the theological phrase "total depravity" refers to man's state as affected by the fall of Adam and by inherited depravity, and carries along with it the idea that all men in their natural state are totally depraved and devoid of all good. To say that sin has affected every part of man's nature (body, mind, heart, soul, spirit, etc.), that it is total, extensively considered, is undoubtedly true; but to say that all men until regenerated are totally depraved in their moral nature (a massa perditionis, as Augustine said), totally devoid of all good, as bad as they can possibly be—that is a statement not in accord with Methodist theology. Methodists believe that the atonement of Christ embraced all men in its saving benefits; and that, while men are not actually saved by it until they accept Christ by faith, yet many of its general benefits have extended to all men from the very beginning of the history of the race, and precede personal salvation. There is some good in all men, even in unregenerate human nature, which is therefore not to be regarded as totally depraved. But, while this is true, Methodist theology affirms that whatever of good is found in unregenerate men is an effect of the atonement, and therefore due not to nature but to grace. If the fallen race had been suffered to exist and propagate itself unredeemed, it would have become totally depraved, but God did not suffer it to go unredeemed. All men, as a result of the atonement, have gracious ability to meet the conditions of salvation.

VIII.

THE DOCTRINES PERTAINING TO PERSONAL SALVATION.

IF we say that "God the Father plans, God the Son executes, and God the Holy Spirit applies," we have a formula which states with approximate accuracy the specific work of each of the three persons of the Trinity in the great work of human redemption. The execution of the divine plan of redemption was committed to the Son, and as fulfilled it is called the atonement. The application of the atoning work of Christ to the actual salvation of men is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose gracious influences act upon and coöperate with the free will of man. It is but another method of stating the same great truth to say that the originating cause of man's salvation is the love of God, the meritorious cause is the sacrifice of Christ, the efficient cause is the power of the Holy Spirit, and the determining cause is the free will of the redeemed sinner. In this chapter we are especially concerned with the two elements last named.

Personal salvation is a result of coöperation between God and man, between the divine and the human will. Although salvation is of God's free grace, it is none the less of man's free choice. While man cannot save himself, neither can God save him, in keeping with the revealed principles of his moral government, unless man himself chooses to fulfill the conditions of salvation. As a mere matter of power, of course the omnipotent divine will can cause the finite human will to do anything, to put forth any volition whatsoever; but such a divinely necessitated human volition could not be free, and in the matter of personal salvation man is entirely free to fulfill or not to fulfill the conditions of salvation. The Bible represents God as being without partiality and no respecter of persons. God our Saviour "will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth," and is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Personal salvation and damnation, therefore, are not determined by election and nonelection in eternity, but by the free will of man. The condition of fallen man as affected by the atonement is one of gracious ability to fulfill all conditions necessary to salvation; but while his present moral ability is of grace, that grace itself is free and not arbitrary and irresistible.

If the work of personal salvation be analyzed and separated into its various parts, it may be said to consist of the following elements: (1) Conviction of sin, which is that work of the Holy Spirit upon the conscience of the sinner by which he is awakened and made to realize his sinful and lost condition; (2) repentance, which is such godly sorrow on account of sin as leads to the forsaking of all sin and the confession of sin; (3) faith, or that belief of the mind and trust of the heart by which the penitent sinner accepts Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour; (4) justification, which is something done for us, being that act of God by which he pardons all the past sins of the penitent believer; (5) regeneration, which is something done in us, being that act of God by which he breaks the dominion of the sin of nature and creates us anew, which transformation is called the new birth and is followed by adoption into the family of God; (6) the witness of the Holy Spirit to the spirit of the regenerate believer, testifying to his pardon and adoption, and producing a divine conviction of salvation; (7) sanctification, which as commonly defined refers to that work of the Holy Spirit, in coöperation with the regenerate spirit, which separates the soul from all sin, carrying on the work begun in regeneration, and completing it in Christian perfection.

The first six elements enumerated above constitute "conversion," as this term is popularly used.* There are three salvations spoken of in the Bible. "Repent of thy sins and believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved;" this is the first. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling;" this is the second, and it is a continuous, progressive work. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved;" this is the third, and refers to final salvation at the last day. A clear knowledge of all these doctrines may not be necessary to salvation, but there can be no intelligent type of piety that is not based upon both an intellectual and an experimental knowledge of all that the Scriptures represent as necessary to salvation.

Conviction of sin is a result of the Holy Spirit's application of the preached word and

* If the term "sanctification" be used in its strictly Scriptural sense, it also is included in conversion. But the common theological use of that term refers it to a work of grace, either progressively or instantaneously wrought subsequent to "conversion."

the divine law to the heart and conscience of a sinner, and is often irresistibly produced; but while the sinner may be convicted against his will, and in spite of efforts to the contrary, yet he is not irresistibly converted. Under conviction he is free either to resist the wooings of the Spirit or to follow the Spirit's leadings on to repentance and faith. A moral free agent is never more free than in that intense and critical moment when he is irresistibly awakened and brought to a knowledge of his true condition. It is the most critical and responsible moment in all his life; for then it is that his eternal destiny is hanging in the balance, and nothing but the will of the free agent can determine which way the scales of destiny shall be made to turn. Conviction of sin is one of the chief offices of the Holy Spirit, as Christ promised: "When he is come, he will reprove [convict] the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." (John xvi. 8.) And he began this work on the day of his coming at Pentecost: "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts ii. 37.)

Repentance and faith are man's work, the only office of the Holy Spirit here being to graciously aid man in fulfilling these human conditions of salvation. The necessity, nature, and benefits of repentance may be shown in these words of Scripture: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." (Luke xiii. 3.) "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. lv. 7.) Of faith it is said: "Without faith it is impossible to please God: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. xi. 6.) "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (Acts xvi. 31.) This means to accept Christ as a personal Saviour. Confession of sin and confession of Christ prove that repentance and faith are true. Justification and regeneration, on the other hand, are entirely God's work; with them man has nothing to do, save that he performs the conditions on which the pardon and regeneration of his soul are suspended. Justification is the pardon of sin, and is conditioned not on our good works but on our faith: "To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." (Rom. iv. 5.) To the penitent the promise is: "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." (Jer. xxxi. 34.) But a deeper work than this is necessary: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John iii. 3.) This is regeneration; it also is conditioned on faith: "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." (John i. 12.)

In the Calvinistic system regeneration comes first; and faith, repentance, and justification follow. Faith is, according to Calvinistic theology, the first act of a regenerate soul. Regeneration, (which is confused with "effectual calling") and irresistible grace, must needs come first because the fallen human race are regarded as totally depraved, as absolutely dead in sin, to exact conditions of whom would be like demanding acts of a physically dead man as a condition of imparting life to him. If God had from all eternity unconditionally elected certain ones to salvation, and foreordained the means and the time of their efficacious call and conversion; if it were true that regeneration comes first, and faith and repentance follow, then would the preaching of the gospel to the unconverted and the call of sinners to repentance and salvation seem to be a useless work, and the present mode of preaching the gospel and pressing the claims of the Christian religion upon the consciences of sinners could not be justified. More faithful to Scripture is that theology which teaches that man, though fallen, and in a sense morally dead, is yet recognized as a living and responsible moral agent, endowed graciously with ability to seek and obtain salvation through divinely appointed conditions (repentance of sin and faith in Christ), on the fulfillment of which God graciously pardons all his past transgressions, and so transforms his sinful moral nature as to deliver him from the dominion of sin and make him a new creature in Christ. It is of the greatest importance that we have true scriptural views concerning the doctrines of personal salvation. We should make no mistake in answering the question of the awakened sinner: "What must I do to be saved?"

It may be asked why personal salvation on God's part consists of both justification and regeneration. Why would not justification alone or regeneration alone suffice to make complete the salvation of a soul? The answer is not far to seek. It is because there are two kinds of sins—actual sin, or voluntary transgression of the law of God; and the sin of nature, which consists of both original sin and the reflex influence on moral character of repeated acts of sin. From both of these kinds of sin man needs to be saved. Justification, or pardon, concerns actual sin alone, and has nothing to do with the sin of nature; and so repentance also is of actual sins, and not of original sin. Regeneration, on the other hand, has to do exclusively with the sin of nature—original sin and the habitus of sin, or hereditary and acquired depravity. A tendency toward disease (consumption, for example) may be inherited, or it may be superinduced by acts of imprudence or by sickness, or it may be both inherited and superinduced; and if so, the two tendencies run together and become one. And so it is with fallen man: he inherits a bias toward sin; and this is strengthened by the effects of actual sin, both alike calling for that divine act which is designated as regeneration. If man were simply justified, and not at the same time regenerated, his past sins would be pardoned; but he would be left under the dominion of his sinful nature, and would necessarily continue to sin. Hence regeneration is represented as "breaking the dominion of sin," "cleansing the moral nature," "being born again," "created anew." Acts of sin may be compared to the black characters written upon a sheet of paper; the sin of nature, to discolored elements that enter into the very fiber of the paper itself. The blotting out of sins (Acts iii. 19) is the pardon of all actual transgressions, but another and different act is required to cleanse and purify the sin-polluted nature of man. Justification and regeneration always take place at the same time.

Conviction of sin is the witness of the Spirit to the sinner's true condition, and so the witness of the Spirit to the regenerate believer may be called conviction of salvation. It is thus that the Holy Spirit both begins and crowns the work of personal salvation. The soul that undergoes all these experiences is a genuine and a happy convert, and nothing less than an experience of all these elements of personal salvation entitles one either to receive from God, as a sacred seal to his salvation, the witness of adoption and the assurance of sonship, or to be regarded by man as a new creature in Christ Jesus. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." (Rom.

viii. 16.) "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." (1 John v. 10.) But what the child of God is conscious of is not "the witness of the Spirit," but the fact of being saved. It is the office of the Holy Spirit to convince him of this fact. But this blessed assurance that belongs by right to every child of God should not be confused with a certain ebullition of joy that sometimes accompanies certain "happy conversions." The latter is a thing of temperament; some have it and some do not; moreover, it "comes and goes." But the true witness of the Spirit is not a thing of temperament, it does not "come and go;" but is a birthright to be claimed by every child of God, no matter what his temperament.

"Quit your meanness, and be saved," may pass for a "short method of salvation" and "religion made easy," and may be followed by shaking the preacher's hand and joining the Church; but it is not the full and complete salvation from sin that is described in the Bible. Conviction of sin, repentance, faith, justification, regeneration, the witness of the Spirit - all these are necessary to make a genuine Bible Christian. Nor have we any right to make personal salvation any simpler or easier than the Bible makes it. When conversion is based upon an intelligent understanding and a genuine experience of all these elements of salvation, then, and then only, does it mean experimental religion and impart spiritual power. Nor should we recognize any conscious sin as compatible with the regenerate state except to be abhorred and forsaken, pardoned and cleansed, as soon as it is seen by the child of God. This ideal of holiness and freedom from sin is the birthright privilege and duty of every child of God from the very moment of his regeneration; and we must not lower God's high standard to make it fit man's shortcomings.

Great as is the work above described in the salvation of a soul, it is not all that is to be done; indeed, it is nothing more than entrance upon the Christian life. And the Christian life does not consist in merely retaining what has been thus attained. The victory over sin has not yet been fully and finally won; the first great battle has been successfully fought, and the long warfare has begun. All sin "in sight" was given up at and in "conversion;" but other sin will presently come in sight as the Christian advances and his spiritual vision grows clearer. And all holiness and love and duty in sight were welcomed, and assumed according to the degree of knowledge and faith then possessed; but knowledge and faith will increase, and soon it will appear that if the character attained in justification and regeneration was regarded as "perfection," it was a very imperfect perfection. Sinlessness, entire holiness, the perfect life—that is the ever-advancing goal that is ahead of the regenerate child of God.

Christian perfection is the name given to this doctrine which holds a place of highest honor in Methodist theology. Perfection is a term which the Scriptures use in describing the ideal religious experience and character which has been made possible by divine grace. Methodism, taking the term from the Bible, teaches that it is not only a possibility and a privilege, but the duty of every child of God to attain unto that type of Christian experience and character, and to lead that life that may be fitly described by the term "Christian perfection." As to what is to be accomplished progressively and what instantaneously, and whether or not Christian perfection is a thing to be "professed"—these are points of secondary importance about which Methodists do now differ, and always have differed.

IX.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE CHURCH.

OUR Thirteenth Article of Religion contains the following definition of the Christian Church: "The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same."

This excellent definition suggests: (1) The relation of the Church to Christ, its divine Founder, whose "ordinances" are its laws. (2) The Church is organized Christianity, not an aggregation of detached and unrelated units, but a visible "congregation" or collection of men bound together by a common relation to Christ and to each other, and organized for the accomplishment of a definite purpose in the world. (3) It is composed of "faithful men"—that is, men who possess both faith in Christ and fidelity to Christ, to secure which type of character in its membership proper conditions of admission to the Church and a proper discipline over those in the Church must be enforced. (4) The first function of the Church is the teaching or preaching of the word, which must be committed mainly, though not exclusively, to those especially charged therewith and trained therefor—that is, the Christian ministry. (5) The sacraments, baptism and the Lord's Supper, are to be duly administered. (6) There are some things which “of necessity are requisite” to the Church and its sacraments, and other things which are not of necessity required—in other words, essentials and nonessentials in religion. In the former there must be unity; in the latter there may be liberty.

While it is most common to designate the Church as the Church of Christ, it is none the less appropriately called the Church of God and the Church of the Holy Spirit. It is the Church of the Triune God. It is first of all called “the church of God” (Acts xx. 28) or the “household of God” (Eph. ii. 19). As such it has existed from the beginning, and is, in a sense, one in all ages. From the beginning of time there have always been true believers in God, and these have constituted the true Church.

The Church is most frequently and appropriately designated as the Church of Christ, because it is founded upon his divine-human person and work, upon his life and teaching, upon his atoning death and resurrection, upon his session at the right-hand of the Father, and his intercession for the saints. The new order of things which Christ came to establish, he usually designates as his kingdom, the "kingdom of God," or the "kingdom of heaven." Only twice does he use the word "Church" (ekklesia), the one case referring to a local assembly of Christian people (Matt. xviii. 17), and the other being the classic passage in which he refers to the visible organization of Christian believers for all time, and announces the faith, the foundation, and the perpetuity of the Church: "He saith unto them [his disciples], But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. xvi. 15-18.) When Christ said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church," he probably referred to St. Peter's confession. Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;" the one great truth contained in which—viz., the divinity of Christ—is the true rock of faith upon which the Church is built. Some think that Christ referred to himself as "this rock;" others, that he referred to St. Peter as a representative of the apostles, whose work and inspired teachings were, in an important sense, to constitute the foundation of the Church.

The Church, again, is the Church of the Holy Spirit. The beginning of the Christian Church as a visible organization took place on the day of Pentecost. For this beginning Christ's work is shown by the Gospel records to have been preparatory. Not until our Lord's revelation concerning the nature of his spiritual kingdom was complete, and not until his atoning death and resurrection were become historical facts, had the time come for the historical beginning and foundation of the Church. The Church is the organ which the Spirit uses for the accomplishment of his work in the world. The Spirit can and does work under any outward form of Church government. That is the truest Church that can furnish, in the number of souls saved through its agency, the most indubitable and abiding evidence of possessing this supreme credential: the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

The visible Church, in the widest sense of that term, includes all Churches and all members in all Churches who acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Head and trust in him and him alone for salvation. These constitute but one spiritual body, as viewed by Christ the Head. The true scriptural unity is not so much one of outward form as of inward life; it is a unity based on a true confession of faith in one God, who is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. It is entirely consistent with this idea of scriptural unity that there should be many religious denominations within the Church of Christ.

There is a distinction to be made between the outward and visible Church, which is composed of all professing Christians, and the true spiritual and invisible Church, which is composed only of real and true Christians. While the visible Church will always contain in its membership some who are not in the invisible and spiritual kingdom of Christ, yet an effort should be made to make the two correspond as nearly as possible. The Church of the New Testament is composed of the saved: "The Lord added to them day by day those that were being saved." (Acts ii. 47.) Before any one is admitted to full membership in the Church, he should give evidence not only of his sincere "desire to flee the wrath to come and to be saved from his sins," but also of "the genuineness of his faith;" in other words, he should give credible evidence of having exercised such repentance and faith as are laid down in the New Testament as the conditions of salvation. This will secure, approximately at least, a membership of truly converted people. If these scriptural conditions of salvation be required as the conditions of admission to the Church, and discipline be duly enforced, then will the visible Church be made as pure and spiritual as is possible here on earth, and then only will the Church be a "congregation of faithful men."

The Christian ministry is a divine vocation in that only those may enter it who are divinely called thereto. We believe that the Holy Spirit chooses those whom he would have to preach, and indicates his choice of them by making an inward impression upon their minds as to their duty in this regard. But the Church also must sit in judgment on those who feel called to preach, and thus "try the spirits to see whether they be of God or not." The Christian ministry, as its name indicates, is first of all an office of service. Ministers are servants of Christ and of the Church. The most important function of the ministry is to preach the word. The salvation of sinners and the edification of believers depend upon their fidelity to this part of their work. If the "pure word of God" is to be preached, the ministry must be educated in a right understanding and interpretation of the Bible; otherwise false and fanatical doctrines may be drawn from the word of God by misinterpretation and unsound exegesis.

Methodism recognizes but two institutions of the Church as sacraments: Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The Church retains the primitive and apostolic custom of baptizing infants. While it is the rule that the children only of Christian parents (or guardians) are presented for baptism, yet the Church teaches that the right of a child to Christian baptism grows out of his own relation to Christ, rather than that of his parent or guardian. As to the mode of baptism, Methodism favors pouring or sprinkling as more simple and symbolic of the "washing of regeneration," but allows perfect liberty on the part of adult applicants for Church membership to choose either of these modes or immersion. The Lord's Supper is regarded as a memorial service and a means of grace of more than ordinary sanctity. It is the privilege and duty of every member of the Church to partake regularly of this sacrament as opportunity offers.

If our doctrine of the Church be true, every branch of the Christian Church is free to determine its own polity or form of government. The value of each can be tested only by time and experience. The polity of Methodism has been on trial for about a century and a half; and that of Episcopal Methodism for a little over a century, during which time it has been constantly undergoing modifications and adaptations to new conditions as its growth and ever-widening mission seemed to demand. Judged by its history in the past and its efficiency and rapid growth at the present time, it is doubtful whether any branch of the Christian Church, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, has ever devised a more scriptural and efficient form of government than that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It behooves every student of Christian doctrines to give it a careful examination.

THE GENERAL RULES.

THE Church of Christ is an aristocracy of virtue. It is the only one which has seriously and successfully battled for a place among men. Truly it is a kingdom of grace, but the only end of that grace is holiness of character and life. Tender and all-giving as Jesus was in his attitude toward penitent men, nothing can exceed his burning candor in laying down the conditions of discipleship. These conditions would be indeed harsh if the power of execution were not furnished from above. But by the divine reënforcement all things are possible, and most moral achievements easy, to men who believe. A life of self-denial is the natural order for one in whom the supreme act and purpose of self-abnegation have gone before, and a life of heroic moral doings is easy to a man who is moved upon by the Spirit of God.

The moral code of Methodism is contained in what are called the General Rules. These rules have thrown their gracious, helpful dominion over many millions who in these more than one hundred and fifty years of our history have gone from the self-denials and labors of this life into the rewards of another. There are now about seven millions within the Methodist fold who are confessedly walking by the same rules.

The only condition required of those who seek membership in our Church is "a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins."

This surely is broad enough, and yet when interpreted in the light of the Rules it leaves nothing to be added. It certainly excludes all who have a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved in their sins.

Those who have this desire to be saved from wrath and sin will, if the desire be genuine, give evidence of it in three ways:

First, by doing no harm—that is, avoiding evil of every kind.

Secondly, by doing good to both the bodies and souls of men.

Thirdly, by attending upon the ordinances of God.

THE THINGS FORBIDDEN.

Taking the name of God in vain.

This includes:

(1) Profane swearing and all forms of cursing, especially such as involve the prerogatives of the Deity. There is much sinful swearing which does not contain the name of God, but implies it. He who curses his fellow-man, with or without the mention of God's name, assumes a place of judgment which belongs to God only.

(2) Perjury, or intentionally false swearing, in which God is called to witness to the truth of what is false. This indicates the utmost baseness of character, and the penalties of the civil law against it are justly severe.

(3) All sacrilegious and other vain or light uses of the name of God.

(4) All idle swearing, which long ago Chaucer pronounced a "crudeness," and which is now, and must ever remain at the least, an act of incivility, and lead the way to more serious and more hurtful forms of the offense.

The name of God stands for his character, and therefore the breaking of the third commandment is one of the most dangerous and debasing of sins.

Profaning the day of the Lord, either by doing ordinary work therein, or by buying or selling.

The three great doctrines taught by the Sabbath as we now have it are:

- (1) That God is the Creator of all things;
- (2) that Christ is risen from the dead; and
- (3) that all our time belongs to God.

“The Sabbath, in its spiritual aspect and meaning, is one of the strongest defenses of the inspiration of the Bible and of the divinity of the religion which it reveals. It is man’s day and God’s day; more thoroughly man’s day because completely God’s day. It is their united time, time of fellowship, hour of communion, opportunity for deeper reading, larger prayer, and diviner consecration.” (Joseph Parker.)

Christianity has no more important institution than the Holy Sabbath. It would be difficult to overestimate the value of the day both to individuals and to communities. The demand for it is laid in the physical constitution of man and the laboring animals. Not only was the Sabbath made for man, but man was made with reference to a Sabbath, so that in this regard, as well as in other things, it is to the best interests of man in his present state to obey God’s commands. Such a rest is necessary to the highest sanity of the individual and the community, and hence it is that the Sabbath is one of the greatest safeguards of personal and national life. It therefore becomes the duty not only of every true religionist and philanthropist, but of every true patriot, to advance by all means a proper keeping of the Sabbath day.

It will be noted that in the divine institution of the Sabbath it was made a day of rest, not of recreation. One of the worst evils of modern times is the habit of using the Sabbath as a day of recreation, and even of dissipation. It behooves all the teaching agencies of Christendom to set themselves against this pernicious drift by teaching in the home, the day school, the Sunday school, and the church how rightly to use the holy Sabbath.

Jesus said that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath; and in saying this he was breaking from off the Sabbath those burdensome conditions which the traditions of the Jews had placed upon it. The divine Sabbath had been so obscured by them as to be wholly lost sight of. The religious teachers who were objecting to Christ's use of the Sabbath for works of mercy were teaching the people that a man should not wear shoes with tacks in them on the Sabbath, lest the grass should be thereby crushed, and thus amount to a sort of mowing; and that a tailor should not place a needle in his coat late in the day before the Sabbath, lest he should forget and leave it there, and thus bear a burden on the Sabbath day. These are but samples of much foolishness which was in vogue in that day, and which perverted God's day so as to make it a burden instead of a blessing. Now Christ, instead of abrogating the Sabbath or implying that it was to be used for recreation, was but restoring it to its original place as a day of rest and religious improvement.

It seems that there were in the days of Isaiah some who took the recreation view of the Sabbath, and the words of the greatest of the old prophets are sufficient to fully cover the case now. God, speaking through him, says: "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (Isa. lviii. 13, 14.)

Let it be noted that the command to work on the other six days is as explicit and as binding as that which requires us to rest on the seventh.

Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity. The Methodists from the beginning have been a temperance people, and they are still such, not in theory only but in practice. The American Methodists constitute, perhaps, the strongest single phalanx in the nation against this mammoth evil. But there needs to be the most thorough and constant teaching on this subject, in order that no generation of our young people shall be liable to repeat the folly and sin of drinking for lack of information. There is no sphere in which it is truer that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Intemperance is the costliest and most destructive sin of mankind. It is this in itself, and in addition it leads in very many cases to every other form of sin. It is the mother of crimes. Intoxicants, even when used under the rule in "cases of necessity," ought to be used with the utmost caution and under the restraints of an enlightened conscience. The story of the man who was bitten by a snake and was given whisky for it, though not new, is exact and apt. The bite got well, and in due time the snake died, but twenty years later the man was still taking the medicine.

All in all, total abstinence is the best rule, because the only one that is absolutely safe.

(a) Fighting, quarreling, brawling; (b) brother going to law with brother; (c) returning evil for evil, or railing for railing; (d) the using many words in buying or selling.

(a) These things are but little less than barbarous, and are wholly out of harmony with that spirit of fraternity which is ever a mark of the truly regenerate man.

(b) As a rule, litigation even for righteous claims is harmful to one's relations and influence. In most cases it is better both morally and financially to pay a lawyer to keep you out of the courts than to take you through them.

(c) "Evil for evil, or railing for railing," embodies the spirit of the old order of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," which Christ distinctly condemned.

(d) "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." Talk straight to the point, and when you have done turn to something else.

The buying or selling goods that have not paid the duty.

The days in which these rules originated were days of much smuggling. The government was being constantly defrauded by shippers and merchants who in various ways were avoiding the payment of the lawful duties. This was simply stealing from the government, and those who knowingly took part in the benefits were partners with the thieves. Of course no truly Christian man could do such a thing. The principle involved still abides.

The tariff may be right or it may be wrong; but in either event the man who knowingly deals in goods which have not paid it is certainly wrong.

There is a very loose notion abroad as to the obligation on the part of the individual to deal fairly and justly with the government and with corporations. An honesty which does not deport itself with exact righteousness in relation to both is not worthy of the name.

The giving or taking things on usury, i. e., unlawful interest.

The word "usury" is from the Latin word usus, which in this connection means "so much for the use of"—that is, any interest whatever. It is in this sense that the word is used in the Bible. It retained this sense until within the last three centuries. The Jews were forbidden by the law to take any interest from each other for the use of money or other commodities. Hence under their law any interest was usury. Usury now means unlawful interest—that is, interest at a higher rate than that provided for in the law of the State within which the business is transacted. The terms "giving" and "taking" seem to include him who borrows at unlawful interest as well as him who lends. It must, nevertheless, be allowed that the two cases are quite different as to the moral element involved.

Uncharitable or unprofitable conversation, particularly speaking evil of magistrates or of ministers.

This is an exceedingly important rule. The power of speech is one of the greatest and most dangerous dignities conferred upon man. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Purity of speech is one of the highest signs of a noble and re-finer nature. Coarseness and baseness of speech can come from but one source. Men do not often make mistakes in their estimate of it. The crudest men know that lowness of speech is unbecoming the children of God.

Uncharitable speech indicates a harsh and uncharitable mood, if not a fixed disposition. It always inflicts two injuries, one upon the victim of it and the other upon the author. Charity even toward one's enemies is one of the strongest pledges of trueness toward one's friends. Uncharitable talk when once begun knows no limits. It is like a fire in a field, which does not burn according to metes and bounds, but by its own heat and the material it finds in all directions to feed upon.

The unprofitable conversation referred to in the rule means light and trashy talk, such as is common among gossips and gabblers, and to which young people are especially liable if not rightly guarded against it. The unfurnished mind finds it much easier to prate about things of no value than to prepare for seasonable and profitable talk. But unprofitable conversation also includes more serious and thoughtful talk which lacks a pure and helpful purpose. This is even more to be avoided than idle and meaningless conversation.

Speaking evil of rulers and ministers is a very common fault. It seems to be assumed by many that any exaltation in office implies the right of the people to make a sort of target of the man thus exalted. Nothing is farther from the truth. Such men deserve the sympathy and the support of those whom they represent in so far as these can be conscientiously given. All faithful men occupying places of trust and power realize that the higher they go as men reckon height, the heavier their responsibilities become and the more burdensome their duties. Men, whether magistrates or ministers, who serve the people faithfully have a right to the moral support of the public. To discount this by evil-speaking is a wrong to the men and oftentimes a crime against the civil or religious interests which such men are set to serve.

If rulers or ministers are either incompetent or unfaithful, let a change be made in a constitutional way. Evil-speaking corrects nothing. .

In general, the habit of reckless criticism within the household needs to be most carefully guarded against. Much infidelity is bred in children by indiscriminate and indiscreet criticism of the preacher and the preaching. Whoever destroys in himself or another a genuine reverence for superiors in years, in attainments, in position rightly used, is foolishly cutting from above him the rounds of the ladder by which he would rise to higher things. A true reverence, especially in young people, is one of the most beautiful and charming of virtues, and is the spring of unnumbered blessings to society. It is the very chivalry of man's moral nature, and adorns every stage of life as nothing else can do.

Doing to others as we would not they should do unto us.

This is merely the negative statement of the golden rule, and includes all forms of injury to our fellow-men.

Doing what we know is not for the glory of God: as,

The putting on of gold and costly apparel.

A display of extravagant and vainglorious finery is always unbecoming in the children of God. This is no doubt the spirit aimed at in this rule. Any such interpretation of it as would lead the Church to regulate the personal habits of its members in regard to their attire has long since ceased. It is, nevertheless, well for all to have due regard to situation and ability in their dressing. The use of jewelry or fine clothing to the exclusion of a liberal part in the benevolent movements of the Church is wrong beyond question, and shows a low and selfish disregard of the claims of others for the necessities of life and for mental and spiritual enlightenment. It indicates a spirit which is far from the spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

The taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.

The language of this rule clearly implies that there are diversions which may be taken without injury. Diversions which are not in themselves harmful to health or character, when not used to excess so as to become a waste of time or a dissipation, may be used with profit.

What those diversions are is left to the intelligence and conscience of the individual believer, except as to those which have been commonly condemned by men as evil, or have been pronounced against by the authorities of our Church. These prohibited amusements are dancing, card-playing, theater-going, attendance upon race courses, circuses, and the like.

Chief among these offenses is the modern dance. The bishops, in their address to the General Conference of 1874, speak on the point as follows: "An explicit utterance was given by order of the last General Conference, in our pastoral address, on 'Worldly Amusements.' We now repeat that utterance. We abate none of its teachings with respect either to manifest inconsistency of such indulgences with the spirit and profession of the gospel, or the perils which they bring to the souls of men. . . . Among these indulgences . . . is the modern dance, both in its private and public exhibition, as utterly opposed to the genius of Christianity as taught by us."

The General Conference of 1890 appointed a special committee of fifteen to prepare an address on the spiritual state of the Church. The report of this committee was adopted by the General Conference and published in the Discipline of that year. In that report is found the following language:

"In this same condemnation, as equally contrary to the Scriptures, which declare that 'the friendship of the world is enmity against God,' to our General Rules, and to the vows which our members have voluntarily assumed, this General Conference would include card playing, theater-going, attendance upon race courses, circuses, and the like. These offenses are likewise justifiable grounds of discipline."

The General Conference, having adopted this report, took the following action:

"Resolved, That inasmuch as the deliverances of our bishops, as contained in their quadrennial addresses to the General Conference from time to time, and as quoted at length by the Special Committee of Fifteen, have declared dancing, theater-going, card-playing, and the like worldly indulgences, to be contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and violative of the General Rules and moral discipline of our Church, as also of the vows of our Church members; we therefore heartily indorse the aforesaid deliverances as containing the just and correct interpretation of the law in the premises, and as such this General Conference accepts the same as having equal force and authority as if contained in the body of the Discipline." (§ 497, Discipline of 1890.)

These utterances and acts put the position of our Church on these diversions beyond question. In this regard the Methodist Church articulates and authoritatively states what all the leading Churches hold. Especially is this true of the modern dance, which, though practiced by many Church members in the various denominations and is even connived at by some communions, is approved by no Church in Christendom, and is severely condemned by most.

A consensus of religious opinion running through many ages of trial and embracing many peoples touching the injurious nature of any practice is itself an almost unanswerable argument against such practice. But a careful examination into the data upon which the Church has made up and holds its estimate of the dance will furnish ample proofs to every age that the practice is thoroughly carnal, wars against spiritual interests, and brings much detriment to the spiritual life of many who engage in it.

But let it be noted that a wise administration of discipline in regard to these things will never be harsh. It is sometimes very difficult for young persons to see in these diversions what the Church sees. While all sane young persons can see that a vow deliberately made and deliberately and habitually broken involves sin, it is still best to reënforce them with such knowledge of the inherent or incidental evil of these practices as will make them both clear and strong in their own views against them. A wise discipline will, therefore, always be by instruction, by patience, and in the main by persuasion.

The singing those songs, or reading those books, which do not tend to the knowledge or love of God.

The songs and books of a people are the mightiest factors in determining of what character a people shall be. Singing and reading are, therefore, suitable subjects for advisory rules on the part of the Church which would bring its members to the highest and best. This rule does not mean that we are to sing no songs or read no books except such as are distinctly religious in character, but rather that we shall avoid all such as are pernicious or empty of substantial good. In Mr. Wesley's time there was very little that was wholesome and edifying in the literature of the day, and much that was bad, and he did a truly great work in expunging, recasting, and making books for his people to read. There is now no more important interest for parents and religious teachers to look after. Many a young person has been ruined by making a companion of one bad book.

Softness or needless self-indulgence.

There is no room for a lazy man in the kingdom of God. A self-indulgent and ease-seeking person cannot fairly claim to be a follower of our Lord, who himself came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and who went about doing good. The servant is not above his Lord. It is every man's duty to be diligent, not only in spiritual concerns but also in temporal affairs. No amount of wealth or opportunity for ease can free a man from the obligation to pursue with alacrity some chosen field of service.

Laying up treasure upon earth.

Mr. Wesley in one of his sermons gives three great mottoes on this subject: (1) Make all you can. (2) Save all you can. (3) Give all you can. Make all you can consistently with perfect integrity and the rights of others. Save all you can—that is, waste nothing. Give all you can consistently with your plain obligations. Mr. Wesley himself made much, wasted nothing, gave everything. Had he been a man of family, he probably could not have made so much, wasted so little, or given all. Nevertheless, he preached the right doctrine and gave the right example concerning earthly treasures. Some wag has said pithily at least that the maxim which governs the business world of to-day is: "Make all you can, and can all you make." Perhaps no desire is more universal and more hurtful to spiritual life than the desire to lay up treasure upon earth. The Church is by no means free from it, and there is much need of sound teaching in order that our people may be saved from an inordinate love of the world.

Borrowing without a probability of paying, or taking up goods without a probability of paying for them.

This is virtually obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, which is a misdemeanor under the laws of many, perhaps most, of the States. Thoroughgoing honesty is one of the most valuable fruits of the gospel, and is one of the most charming traits in Church members as they are looked upon by the eyes of the world. There are honest pagans; shall any Christian be less?

The next section of the Rules, on doing good, is given so clearly and in such detail as to need no comment. It is as follows:

It is expected of all who continue in these societies that they should continue to evidence their desire of salvation,

Secondly, by doing good, by being in every kind merciful after their power, as they have opportunity, doing good of every possible sort, and, as far as possible, to all men:

To their bodies, of the ability which God giveth, by giving food to the hungry, by clothing the naked, by visiting or helping them that are sick or in prison;

To their souls, by instructing, reproofing, or exhorting all we have any intercourse with; trampling under foot that enthusiastic doctrine that "we are not to do good unless our hearts be free to it."

By doing good, especially to them that are of the household of faith, or groaning so to be; employing them preferably to others, buying one of another, helping each other in business; and so much the more because the world will love its own, and them only.

By all possible diligence and frugality, that the gospel be not blamed.

By running with patience the race which is set before them, denying themselves, and taking up their cross daily; submitting to bear the reproach of Christ, to be as the filth and offscouring of the world, and looking that men should say all manner of evil of them falsely for the Lord's sake.

It is expected of all who desire to continue in these societies that they should continue to evidence their desire of salvation,

Thirdly, by attending upon all the ordinances of God; such are,

The public worship of God.

There is much strength in fellowship, no matter what the issue; especially is this the case in spiritual things. No man is so strong as not to need the reënforcement which comes from communion with those of like mind and heart. The doctrines of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man stand very close together. He who has lost his sense of fellowship would do well to look closely into the foundations of his faith. The great defection of Thomas against his Lord was due to his being absent from the first prayer meeting after the resurrection. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is." When the Pentecost came, the disciples were of one accord in one place. The divine presence is promised to the assemblies of the saints.

The ministry of the word, either read or expounded.

Jesus ordained that the world should be saved by the preaching of the gospel. There is no substitute for preaching. It has regulated the ethical state of men through the ages more than any other influence, and will probably continue to do so to the end.

Paul asks: "How can they hear without a preacher?" It may also be asked: "How can he preach without hearers?" It is the plain duty of every member who can to attend regularly upon the ministry of the word, and especially upon that of his own Church. All the good ends of good preaching are helped by good hearing.

The Supper of the Lord.

Our Lord, who while living made himself of no reputation, left of himself when departing no monument except that he made of the perishable elements, bread and wine, a remembrancer. Even this is conditioned upon love and faith upon the part of those who eat and drink. He did not designate a place, a time, or a quantity. He said in substance: Do this as oft as ye shall do it in remembrance of me. The use of this holy sacrament is both a privilege and a duty. Many have been deterred from it by foolish and superstitious conceits. He eats and drinks worthily who eats and drinks with faith, and, it might be added, with a sense of his own unworthiness.

It is the place of the stewards in each charge to procure and arrange the elements for the sacrament. This should always be attended to in a becoming way. In some places there is much neglect. A neat pitcher, however cheap, is better than the bottle which sometimes appears. There is no occasion in connection with which there is more reason that all the proprieties should be carefully observed.

Family and private prayer.

There can be no spiritual life without prayer. It is "the Christian's vital breath." The neglect of it is always followed by religious decline. The great movements of the Church can be marked by the presence of men and women who were mighty in prayer—princes who prevailed with God.

The family altar is the birthplace of reverence and devotion as is no other place on earth. Parents who allow their children to go into the severe ordeals of life without its hallowed memories and fruits commit a great wrong against their offspring.

Searching the Scriptures.

One might as well expect to become a great lawyer without studying the common law or the statutes of his State as to become a robust Christian without a thorough knowledge and frequent reading of the word of God. It is the sword of the Spirit, and he who fights sin in himself and others must know and constantly use it. The tendency to turn all Scripture study out of the family into the Sunday school is pernicious. The home is the best place for readying and studying God's word.

Fasting or abstinence.

This rule has fallen very much into disuse. It is, nevertheless, an important one. There are occasions in religious life and effort for which fasting or abstinence is an almost necessary preparation. It is wholesome for the body, quickens the mental faculties, tends to a sense of dependence by impressing us with the perishable nature of our bodies and of all terrestrial life, leads to gratitude for material gifts, and in many ways helps toward a more spiritual order of living.

XI.

THE CONFERENCES OF METHODISM.

The assembly name of Methodism in all its branches is the word "Conference." The spirit and purpose of Methodist assemblies is very well conveyed by this term, which means a meeting together in order to confer touching all the persons and interests which lie within the domain of the Conference.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has five kinds of Conference: Church, Quarterly, District, Annual, General.

1. The Church Conference is composed of all the members of the local Church and resident members of the Annual Conference. The pastor is the chairman. A secretary is elected annually by the body. This Conference is very much like a family meeting in which all the interests of the household may be freely discussed and all local interests looked after, and is invaluable in quickening all the interests of the Church.

The Church Conference is directed to meet once a month in stations, and at least once every three months at each appointment on circuits. For order of work see Discipline, ¶ 91.

2. The Quarterly Conference. — This body meets, as its name implies, once a quarter, or four times in each Conference year. It is composed of all the traveling and local preachers residing within the circuit or station, with the exhorters, stewards, trustees, and class leaders of the respective circuits, stations, and missions, together with the superintendents of Sunday schools who are male members of the Church, the secretaries of Church Conferences, and the presidents of Senior Epworth Leagues, when eligible. The chairman of the Quarterly Conference is the presiding elder or, in his absence, the preacher in charge. For order of work see Discipline, ¶ 87.

3. The District Conference. — This meeting is held once a year in each district at such time as the presiding elder may appoint. The District Conference is composed of all the preachers in the district, traveling and local, and of laymen, the number of whom and the mode of their appointment each Annual Conference determines for itself. The chairman of the District Conference is a bishop or, in his absence, the presiding elder. For order of work see Discipline, ¶ 72.

4. The Annual Conference.—This Conference is composed of all the traveling preachers in full connection with it and four lay representatives from each district. The lay members are chosen annually by the District Conference, and participate in all the business of the Conference except such as involves ministerial character. The number and bounds of the Annual Conferences are determined by the General Conference. The time of each meeting is appointed by the bishop in charge, and the place is fixed by the Conference. The President of the Annual Conference is one of the bishops or, in his absence, a member of the Conference elected by ballot. The president thus elected discharges all the duties of a bishop except that of ordination.

This is by far the most important, though not the highest in authority, of all the Conferences of Methodism. It has executive supervision of all the interests of the Church within its prescribed bounds, such as furnishing the people with the gospel, Home and Foreign Missions, Church extension, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, and Christian education. It has also large powers of initiation. Indeed, much of our General Conference legislation originates as to the thought and plan within one or more of the Annual Conferences, and no constitutional matter passed upon by the General Conference can become law without the approval of three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences.

The Annual Conference passes at each session upon the personal life and official administration of every preacher who is a member of it. The method adopted in this is as open and clear as possible. The name of each man is called in open Conference under the question, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The answer must be audible and without ambiguity. If a negative answer be given by anybody, lay or clerical, the law provides for an immediate investigation, and the acquittal of the accused or the imposition of proper penalties, the extremest of which is expulsion from the ministry and the Church. The right of appeal belongs to every member who is convicted of any crime. That appeal is to the General Conference next ensuing. If a member be tried and acquitted, there can be no appeal: the decision of the Annual Conference is final. The Annual Conference has the right to locate one of its members for inefficiency or unacceptability. Such action does not imply anything against the personal character of the one so dealt with.

We have forty-four Annual Conferences. Five of these are in foreign countries, and one lies partly in Mexico and partly in the United States.

5. The General Conference.—This body is composed of an equal number of traveling preachers and laymen, elected by the several Annual Conferences. The maximum and minimum ratios of representation are fixed by what is called the Second Restrictive Rule. Within the limits thus fixed the General Conference may determine from time to time such ratios as it may deem advisable. The present ratio is one clerical member for every forty-eight members of each Annual Conference, and an equal number of lay members. The latest General Conference (1906) was composed of two hundred and ninety-two members.

The President of the General Conference is one of the bishops or, if all the bishops should be absent or disabled, a member of the body elected by ballot. The bishops are not members of the General Conference otherwise than as Presidents of the body when in session.

The General Conference is the only legislative assembly of the Church, and its business is largely transacted through established committees, very much as in other legislative bodies. The standing committees are fourteen in number, and are as follows: Episcopacy, Revisals, Boundaries, Itinerancy, Missions, Sunday Schools, Epworth League, Education, Temperance, Finance, Church Extension, Publishing Interests, Colportage, Appeals.

The General Conference, being a delegated body, representative of the whole Church, has power to do whatever it deems best for the interests of the Church within the limits prescribed in the Six Restrictive Rules. It has power also to alter any of these rules except the first, which relates to the making of any change in our Articles of Religion. The method prescribed for altering any of the other five is given in a proviso to the Sixth Rule. It provides that the proposed change shall pass the General Conference by a two-thirds majority, and then be ratified by three-fourths of the members of the several Annual Conferences present and voting. Such proposals of change may originate with the Annual Conferences. In that event the order is reversed, and a three-fourths vote in the Annual Conferences must be followed by a two-thirds vote of the General Conference.

The General Conference meets once in four years in the month of April or May, and at such place as it may select.

In the interim of the General Conferences the work prescribed by it is carried forward under the direction of the following

GENERAL BOARDS.

(1) The Book Committee, which has full supervision of all our publishing interests, and to which all connectional officers are amenable for their official conduct till the meeting of the General Conference. This committee is composed of thirteen members, six clerical and seven lay, elected by the General Conference, on nomination of a special committee appointed by the bishops. It elects its own chairman and secretary quadrennially.

(2) The Board of Missions, which consists of a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and seventeen managers, elected by the General Conference quadrennially. The bishops and the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension are ex officio members of the Board.

The Board of Managers has full charge of all foreign missionary affairs, such as the raising of funds and their application, the selection of candidates for the work, and the supervision of all the interests of the Church in foreign fields.

This Board has also an Assistant Secretary, elected by the Board quadrennially.

(3) The Sunday School Board. This Board consists of six members, five elected quadrennially by the General Conference, and the Sunday School Editor, who is elected quadrennially by the General Conference, and who is ex officio chairman of the Board. To this Board belongs the general management of all Sunday school interests throughout the Church.

(4) The Epworth League Board, consisting of thirteen members, six clerical and six lay and one of the bishops, who is ex officio President of the Board. Besides the President and General Secretary, who is elected quadrennially by the General Conference, the other officers are three Vice Presidents and a Treasurer, who are elected quadrennially by the Board.

(5) The Board of Education, which is composed of fifteen members, elected by the General Conference on nomination of the Committee on Education. The Board elects its own President, Vice President, and Recording Secretary, who also acts as Treasurer. The Corresponding Secretary, known as the Secretary of Education, is elected by the General Conference.

It is the duty of this Board to supervise all the educational interests of the Church, as provided for in Chapter XII. of the Discipline.

(6) The Board of Church Extension, which consists of a President, Vice President, Corresponding Secretary, and Treasurer, and thirteen members, elected quadrennially by the General Conference, and continuing in office until their successors are elected and accept. The bishops and Secretary of Board of Missions are ex officio members of the Board. For a full statement of the work committed to this Board see Discipline, ¶¶ 386-399.

All these Boards meet once a year, usually in the month of May, and in the city of Nashville, except the Board of Church Extension, which meets in Louisville, Ky.

XII.

THE ITINERANCY.

THE Methodist itinerancy is the most perfectly organized obedience the world has yet seen to the great commission: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

The two commands of the commission are to go and to preach.

A Church which was the chief exponent of that phase of Arminian theology which teaches that all men are free to be saved, and that nothing stands in the way thereto except their own agency, could not logically stop short of claiming the world for its parish. To visit that parish with the gospel was the great economic problem with which it undertook to deal in the production of an itinerant plan for the preaching of the gospel.

Every one entering our traveling connection solemnly pledges himself to go anywhere to preach the gospel, whither the appointing power may send him. This does not mean simply anywhere within that Annual Conference with which he connects his fortunes, but anywhere within the range of a reasonable demand for his services.

This leads me to remark that the Methodist itinerancy is as general as the episcopacy. Every preacher who unites with any Conference thereby joins the traveling connection—that is, joins the ministry of Southern Methodism to go whithersoever the bishop may see such need of his services as justifies his appointment. This is the economic fact upon which the transfer power of the bishop is based. Otherwise the transfer power would become nothing more than a power of persuasion, and as a matter of authority amount to nothing. It is proper to say here that our bishops usually, perhaps unexceptionally, confer with a preacher to be transferred from his own to another Conference, so as, in a good measure, to secure his assent before he is appointed. The bishops, nevertheless, have the power to transfer a preacher to any field within our boundaries without his consent, and even against his will in the case. It is due to be said here that, inasmuch as our itinerancy is as general as our episcopacy, and as our Church confers upon the bishops the right to transfer preachers without any final right on the part of the preachers to refuse, such preachers, when transferred, have the same right to consideration and fellowship as those who have been members of the receiving Conference from the beginning. As a matter of fact, the transfer has to forego many things which are peculiarly dear to a Methodist preacher in order to serve the Church by obeying the order of Providence and the appointing power to the extent of leaving his own Conference to take work in another.

But the life work of nearly all our preachers is within the bounds of the Annual Conference with which they first connect themselves. Within those bounds every man is appointed to his work each year by the bishop who presides. The bishop alone is the responsible appointing power. This does not mean that no others exert an influence. The bishop receives much advice, a large amount of which he is no doubt wise in disregarding. But so vast a movement as the itinerancy does not leave so vital a matter to haphazard. The bishops are furnished with the best system possible for obtaining counsel of the most seasoned kind in regard to both the preachers to be appointed and the fields to be served. For the full vindication of this position it is necessary that we glance at the order of work within the Conference.

Each Annual Conference contains quite a large territory, sometimes a whole state, sometimes a half state, and so on, according to the population to be served, etc. The largest Conferences have from one hundred and fifty to two hundred pastoral charges, embracing from sixty to one hundred thousand Church members. Each Conference is divided into a number of presiding elders' districts, from ten to twelve, according to the number of charges in the Conference. These districts usually contain from twelve to twenty pastoral charges. The presiding elder, appointed annually by the bishop, has charge of the district, and his duties in general are to preach on four occasions in each pastoral charge, to preside over the Quarterly and District Conferences, counsel with the preachers for their own improvement and for the benefit of the Church, and to see that all the interests of the Church are looked after. This office is one of very great importance, and when duly magnified stands second only to that of a bishop. It involves heavy labors, large responsibilities, and vast opportunities.

This leads us back to the question of the appointing power and the usual method of its exercise. All the presiding elders of an Annual Conference compose a council which has come to be called the bishop's cabinet. Usually the presiding bishop calls the presiding elders to meet him daily, and they together go carefully over the charges, examining into the work of the preachers, and making a tentative appointment of each to a place. There are frequent revisions of these appointments before they are ready for announcement at the close of the Conference. Not only does the bishop have the full benefit of the counsel of these chosen advisers, but any preacher or layman has access to the presiding elders and the bishop to show any view he may hold in regard to men and places. But after all, the responsibility for every appointment is with the bishop, who, if he should choose, has power to change all the appointments agreed upon by the presiding elders, including the places of the presiding elders themselves.

It has been said by some that this order places too much power in the hands of the bishops. This might be true under certain conceivable conditions. But so long as wise men do not put themselves to great trouble to do foolish things, or good men to do bad things, in either case without reward and in full view of persuasive penalties, there is no danger of the misuse of this peculiarly sacred power.

As to our preachers, we hold strongly that God calls those whom he would have to proclaim his message, and that such a call implies a call to thoroughly prepare for the best use of the holy office.

When one is inwardly persuaded of his call to the ministry, he is, if on examination found worthy, recommended by the Quarterly Conference of the charge to which he belongs for license to preach. This recommendation is now to the District Conference. Formerly—that is, from the time of our organization till 1894—the licensing of preachers was by the Quarterly Conference. The District Conference receiving the recommendation examines into the gifts, graces, and usefulness of the candidate; and, finding him worthy, grants a license for one year, which must thereafter be annually renewed until the local preacher thus made is ordained a deacon. This ordination comes in due course, by vote of the Annual Conference, in four years, provided the local preacher has done satisfactory work and is recommended by the District Conference for this order. If the local preacher thus made desires to join the traveling connection, he procures a recommendation from the District Conference to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. At the session of the Annual Conference he is examined by two committees touching his gifts, attainments, and suitableness for this work. If found worthy, and if he be needed, he is admitted on trial by a majority vote of the Annual Conference. He is not then a member of the Conference, but is a local preacher on trial to become a member. If at the expiration of two years he has proven his fitness for the work, and passed satisfactory examinations on the course of study for the two years, he is by order of the Conference ordained a deacon and admitted into membership in the Conference. If he continue for two years more to demonstrate his fitness for the work, and pass the required examinations on the course of study for the third and fourth years, he is ordained an elder.

When once admitted into membership in the traveling connection, there are five ways of going out: To withdraw; to die; to be expelled for immorality, as provided for in the Discipline; to ask for and receive a location; and to be located by vote of the Conference for inefficiency or unacceptability. When location occurs, either by request or by the unsolicited vote of the Conference, the one thus located remains a local preacher.

It should here be noted that the work of a local preacher is chiefly to preach within the charge to which he belongs, under the direction of the preacher in charge, and to assist in all manner of religious work as opportunity may offer. The local preacher pursues some other vocation for a livelihood, and usually receives nothing for his services as a preacher. The local preacher has been, through most of our history, a great power in the Church. With the multiplication of regular pastors, and a decrease in the size of pastoral charges, by which most of our people are furnished with frequent opportunities for hearing the word, there has come a decline in our local ministry which is to be much regretted. There is still room for the constant employment of thousands of such godly and devoted men, and the seer who can suggest a plan by which the local ministry can be restored to its pristine power and spiritual glory will confer a lasting benefit upon the Church. The English Methodists, amidst their crowded conditions, are making great use of it.

Within the Annual Conference, and apart from those who are in the active work, there are supernumerary and superannuated preachers. "A supernumerary preacher is one who is so disabled by affliction as to be unable to preach constantly, but who is willing to do any work in the ministry which the bishop may direct and he may be able to perform." "A superannuated preacher is one who is worn out in the itinerant service." Superannuated preachers are supported in whole or in part, usually in part, and a very small part at best, out of the superannuates' fund—a fund raised chiefly by collections throughout the Annual Conference for that purpose.

The highest place in our ministry is that of bishop, or General Superintendent. Our bishops are elected by the General Conference, which, as we have seen, is a delegated body composed of an equal number of traveling preachers and laymen. Bishops are in every way amenable to the body which makes them. The life and official administration of each is passed under review once in four years. This is done in what is known as the Committee on Episcopacy. Any preacher or layman in the connection may come, by letter or in person, before this committee with any complaint he may wish to make. It thus happens that our bishops' lives are lived in the open like those of all our preachers. No class is held to a stricter accountability; and yet there is in that Committee, as elsewhere, a profound reverence for the office and for those who are called to fill it. This is largely due to the unimpeachable integrity and purity of those who have been occupants of that place. We have never had a case of trouble with a bishop on moral grounds, and none of a serious nature on grounds of administration.

The College of Bishops meets once a year, in the month of May, to consider all the interests of the Church committed to them. There is an annual assignment made of each bishop to the work of the ensuing year. This is done through a committee of bishops appointed for that purpose by the College.

There is no class of preachers among us to which is assigned so long and varied a list of duties as to our bishops. Their responsibilities are of the largest, and their fields of labor practically boundless. This will be readily seen by reading, in Chapter III., Section 2, of the Discipline, what the Church provides that its bishops shall do.

The bishops, being general superintendents, are supported by the general Church out of funds collected for the purpose within each Annual Conference. Bishops who have become superannuated, and the widows and children of deceased bishops, are sustained in the same way. Both the salaries and allowances are fixed by recommendation of the Committee on Episcopacy.

XIII.

OUR CONNECTIONALISM.

WE may say, without any disparagement of other forms of Church government, that there is one element in Methodism which surpasses anything hitherto known in Church organization. That feature may be called the genius of it rather than a mere element. We refer to its connectionalism. We call it the genius of Methodism because it pervades with its spirit every part of the system from the reception of a preacher on trial to the bishopric or general superintendence, and is in all the work of the Church from the extension of church-building within the home field to the giving of the gospel to every creature. By connectionalism we mean that summation of conditions by which the whole Church is present in a good sense wherever any part of it exists—that is, each part is in vital relation to all the others. The most inexperienced preacher in the humblest field is there in effect by the appointment or will of the whole Church. The Church brings this appointment about by the simplest and most rational method possible. It is through the bishop, who has a wholly general relation, and who is as truly subject to appointment by his peers as the pastors are to appointment by him. He has his work assigned him once a year, and each time his field is as liable to be within China or Brazil as in Tennessee. But this general superintendence, which is thus free from local prejudices, is not a haphazard matter. The bishop does his work after counsel from the presiding elders, whose business it is to know in as far as possible both the man and the field. The bishops themselves are elected to this work by the whole Church in a delegated assembly, which is composed of traveling preachers and laymen in equal numbers, and the bishops are constantly amenable to this body for the way in which they exercise this appointing power as well as all other functions which belong to the office. It is in this way that the whole Church makes the appointment of any preacher, whether he be the pastor of the remotest mission, with its peculiar hardships, or the episcopacy, with its fullness of care and responsibility. This principle finds most impressive illustration when an Annual Conference meets in its last session to receive the appointments. In the whole body not a man knows certainly what his field of labor will be until the pronouncement falls from the lips of the bishop, the man through whom the Church appoints him. These men are not less ardent in their attachments because of the fact that their system makes them cosmopolitan in their sympathies and habits of thought. No men have stronger individuality or more definite preferences than Methodist preachers. They go, nevertheless, whithersoever they are sent with a good cheer which is utterly inexplicable to those who do not understand the workings of our system. There is no truer exhibition of moral sublimity in all the organizations of men than an Annual Conference receiving the appointments.

There is not to be found elsewhere in human history such a combination of self-surrender and pure democracy as is found in the Methodist itinerancy and its loyal acceptance by the Church. The self-surrender element is found in the Catholic Church, especially in its Jesuitism, but the democracy is not there. With the Romanists everything proceeds from a so-called infallible pope; with the Methodists everything, including its ministry throughout, is of the Church. The self-surrender of the Methodist preacher, while in a broad and high sense absolute, is yet under guard of a democratic order so thorough and complete as to take out of it all elements of mere chance and as far as possible all dangers from mere personal prejudice. In other words, his surrender is not to any man or committee of men, but to the whole Church for the good of the whole. Not only so, but the surrender of the right, on the part of the preacher, to choose his field of work is answered back to by the surrender, on the part of the congregation, of its right to choose a pastor. And yet there is no lack of intelligent counsel both ways. A practical outcome of this order is that probably no Church is better satisfied with its pastors, and no preachers more unselfishly devoted to their people.

• As it is in the ministry, so it is in the work of the Church. The Church itself in general council determines what work shall be undertaken of a general order, and by a rational method determines what part of the work shall be done by each part of the Church, and thus stands back of the individual pastor, as he proceeds to his task, and furnishes the pledge of its assembled wisdom to each congregation as it goes forward with the achievement of its part of the whole. It will be easily seen that this plan greatly reënforces the individual invention of the pastor, and, when the pastor is wholly lacking in invention, provides for a safe and harmonious schedule of Church work.

In the connectional order of Methodism the Boards of Management are truly General Boards. Each Annual Conference has its own Boards, but in addition to superintending local or Conference interests these Boards have a connectional side. They execute within the Annual Conferences the plans of the General Boards. The General Boards are created by the General Conference every four years, and in all the interests committed to them they stand for the General Conference in the interims of its meetings. In this way the will of the general Church or General Conference is made to run on without lack of authority or resources as surely and as successfully as if each interest were under the immediate direction of the General Conference itself. As a result of this arrangement, whatever these Boards undertake, within the limitations put upon them, becomes a matter for the whole Church, in the doing of which the honor of the Church is involved, and in which the loyalty of every charge to the will of the general Church comes into play.

There are certain things which stand related to this connectional organization very much as in geometry a corollary is related to a theorem and its processes of demonstration. Logically considered, they are "obvious consequences," whether they have as yet materialized into a part of our polity, as some of them have, or stand forth only in the form of a logical demand that the Church shall use them.

One of these corollaries is the transfer power, which is born of the relation of our general superintendency to our general itinerancy as set forth in the discussion of "Our Itinerancy."

Two other conclusions which connectionalism was bound to reach, and did reach long ago, were a connectional organ and a connectional publishing interest. How well these have worked, we have all seen long ago. Some years ago, when the Publishing House became involved to a point of practical insolvency, the connectional spirit was appealed to, and a process was begun which resulted quickly in its recuperation, and brought it in a short while to foundations which are among the securest in modern commerce. The same thing was illustrated in the payment in one year of a missionary debt of more than one hundred and thirty thousand dollars without diminishing the regular collections for that interest. This magnificent result was largely due to the fact that when the Secretary, Dr. Morrison, went forth on his mission he was as much at home and in authority in San Francisco as he was in Nashville, where the offices of the Boards are located. Again the rallying of the connectional spirit, and the use of the connectional opportunity, saved the cause.

But there are two other conclusions which are inevitable from the connectional order of Methodism, which are just beginning to be realized as a part of the polity of the Church. One of these is a connectional system of education. The present Board of Education has taken steps which unquestionably tend in that direction, and some progress has been made toward practical results. Indeed, the act of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University and of the General Conference in making that institution the university of the whole Church gives promise of a thoroughly related and compacted system which will enable us to lead the van, not by the sacrifice of other great schools, but by an order which will help them all, and which will reach down and clasp hands with the public school system so as to conserve rather than in any sense surrender the Methodist element in them.

But perhaps the finest conclusion, and one which we are barely entering upon, is the creation of a connectional fund for our superannuated preachers. The doing of this is an easy thing under a proper plan and with the right time limits. This is a matter in which we can much better afford to go slowly than not to go at all. The lifetime of a Church is a long stretch. So long as our itinerancy continues, the worn-out preacher without resources is to be a stupendous fact in our Church life. The General Conference of 1902 determined upon the raising of five million dollars for this purpose. The sources chiefly relied upon under that order are popular collections and bequests. Other sources will probably be put under contribution later. There are at least two others which might be used with great profit to the fund. The first of these is a certain per cent of the popular collection in every charge. The stimulating effect of such a movement would make the remaining per cent a larger amount than that which is now raised for the same purpose, and would result in the bringing of this great claim clearly before our people. The second is a fixed percentage of the clearings of the Publishing House.

After all, nothing of an economic kind would have a better effect in guarding our ministry against the danger of the continuance of inefficient men in the traveling connection. Such a fund would bring a better service and a greater dignity to the Church, and a larger sense of security to the faithful men who are toiling on amidst galling limitations to serve their generation by the will of God.

It is easy to see that the Methodist polity, when operated according to its design, is an organization of tremendous force and unequalled flexibility. The system is capable of a vast impact, one which is scarcely resistible within the domain of the Church's work. But from the fact that our polity is a perfect concatenation of parts—that is, a chain of essential links—it follows that a want of strength or adjustment at any point affects the efficiency of the whole order. It implies, therefore, an extraordinary responsibility for all those who have any vital connection with the operation of the system.

From what has been said concerning the relation of parts in our system, it is not difficult to see that we are at the farthest remove from the congregational system. The two orders are as unlike as possible. They will not mix. Whether the congregational order could be improved by the organic adoption of certain features of our polity is a curious question on which we do not desire to enter; but that any tendency toward congregationalism, or even broader forms of localizing, works detriment to our interests there can scarcely be any question. It is a question whether or not there is such a tendency in some sections among us. We have occasionally seen symptoms which look in this direction, but nothing which indicates a serious change of thought, only a loss of sympathy. It is well, however, for every pastor and teacher to keep careful and statesmanlike guard over the loyalty of the people to our connectional order and interests.

MISSIONS.

THE BIBLE A MISSIONARY BOOK.

The doctrine of missions does not rest upon any particular passage or passages in the Bible, but upon the fundamental conception of the whole Book. The Bible in every essential element is missionary. It reveals a universal God and Father, a world-wide redemptive scheme, and a Saviour whose love and power encompasseth all nations of the earth. The whole Bible, then, is the basis of our missionary obligation.

MISSIONS IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

If we but think of God's universal claims as we come to the study of the Old Testament, we shall find a missionary sweep in revelation which will carry us infinitely beyond the ancient tribal conception of God and lift us infinitely above the pharisaism of the Jews.

God has been careful to reveal universal claims and a scheme of world-wide redemption. His missionary plan for the world runs through the whole of the Old Testament.

1. There is deep missionary significance in God's promise to Abraham.

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. xii. 1-3.)

2. There is deep missionary significance in God's commands.

It is Jehovah's purpose to maintain world-wide supremacy and to lead all nations back to himself. So in the first commandment,

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me" (Ex. xx. 3).

he banishes all other gods and all other religions. The modern argument, therefore, that Christianity is for America, Buddhism for China, and Hindooism for India is as absurd and presumptuous as the Jews' assumption that Jehovah is the God of the Hebrews only.

3. There is deep missionary significance in the utterance of the prophets.

Isaiah, the great statesman and reformer of Judah, had a world-wide vision.

“And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord’s house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.” (Isa. ii. 2.)

He saw the unlimited scope of God’s purpose in Israel—viz., the promulgation of the gospel to the ends of the earth.

“Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. . . . He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.” (Isa. xlii. 1-4.)

The great prophet sees also every living soul as a subject of redeeming grace and voices God’s all-inclusive invitation.

“Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. . . . Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.” (Isa. lv. 1-5.)

Jeremiah, prophesying at a time of great disturbance within the nation, was not concerned wholly with the fate of his own people.

“O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods? Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is The Lord.” (Jer. xvi. 19-21.)

Ezekiel, a Jewish prophet in the time of the Babylonian captivity, was solicitous not only for the Jew, but also for the nations round about.

“Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. . . . Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it.” (Ezek. xxxvi. 33-36.)

“And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them." (Ezek. xxxix. 21.)

So also Amos, Zechariah, Jonah, and others have their missionary message.

4. There is a deep missionary tone in the songs of David.

"Nothing is more striking in the Psalms than the unquestioning and natural directness with which they embrace the heathen, the nations, as equally included with Israel in the purpose and the kingdom of God." (Dean Church.)

"Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. ii. 8.)

"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations." (Ps. xxii. 27, 28.)

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." (Ps. xxiv. 1.)

"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." (Ps. lxxii. 8.)

MISSIONS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Jesus Christ is the supreme representative of the missionary conception of the New Testament. Only on the hypothesis of the offer of salvation to all men and of Christ's purpose that the gospel should be preached to all the world can the words and acts of Jesus be understood. (Bishop Bashford.)

A World Saviour Proclaimed.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke ii. 10, 11.)

God's World-Wide Love and Purpose in the Gift of a Saviour.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John iii. 16.)

The Saviour's Conception of His World-Wide Mission.

"For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke xix. 10.)

"And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." (John xii. 47.)

The Master's Missionary Purpose.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matt. xxiv. 14.)

The Master's Missionary Teaching.

The Pharisees believed that God was the God of the Jews and excluded all other nations from the kingdom. Against this selfish and exclusive view the Master directed much of his teaching.

In the opening words of the pattern prayer Jesus teaches the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Who would dare pray, "Our Father," and then limit the kinship of God to a single tribe or nation. Dr. O. E. Brown declares: "He who says 'Our Father' is either a missionary or a hypocrite." To pray in sincerity "Our Father" is to feel the passion of brotherhood that runs through the whole of the missionary movement. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" can never be offered as a prayer by one who would exclude from Christ's kingdom a single nation or tribe on earth.

"Every parable Jesus spoke, every principle he enunciated is of universal application. How can one interpret the parables of the lost piece of money, or of the lost sheep over which the shepherd rejoices more than over the ninety and nine who went not astray, and yet limit the teaching of Jesus to the Jews alone? Such a limitation is a contradiction of these parables. The parable of the great supper teaches the call of nations in the high-ways and the hedges as well as of individuals. The parable of the prodigal son is spoken especially to warn the Jews that the Gentiles may yet return to God and find a welcome home." (Bishop Bashford.)

The Master died rather than give up his missionary purpose. The Jews would have gladly made him king and set him upon a temporal throne as the antagonist of Rome. They pleaded with him to that end. But his was a spiritual kingdom, planned for the race and destined to include all nations.

The Master's Post-Resurrection Command.

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matt. xxviii. 18-20.)

The Missionary Programme of the Apostolic Church.

"Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things." (Luke xxiv. 45-48.)

"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts i. 8.)

The Missionary Lesson for Peter.

Peter was primarily the apostle to the Jews, but under his first great sermon men from every nation heard and were saved. (Acts xi.) Even this remarkable fact did not fully win him from Jewish narrowness; so God gave him a special lesson, in the sheet let down from heaven, to teach him that all nations were included in his kingdom. (Read Acts x. 9-48.)

Paul the Great Missionary to the Gentiles.

God's missionary plan for Paul was well defined in the mind of the Master, but it was given to Paul step by step. To Ananias the whole scheme was outlined as follows:

"But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." (Acts ix. 15, 16.)

Paul's Missionary Call.

"But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." (Gal. i. 15, 16.)

Paul's Missionary Conviction.

"One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." (Eph. iv. 5, 6.)

"I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." (Rom. i. 14, 15.)

Paul's missionary activity is a vindication of God's purpose of world conquest. His epistles are strong in defense of this policy, and he ever opposes vigorously the narrowness of the Pharisees of his times.

John's Message.

John the beloved gives us a crowning message of unsurpassed missionary significance.

“And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.” (Rev. xiv. 6.)

“And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.” (Rev. xxii. 17.)

XV.

THE MODERN MISSIONARY AWAKEN- ING.

THE LARGER MOVEMENT.

The theme of missions is not new. We have seen in the preceding chapter that missions has a large place in the scheme of the Old Testament, and that the central theme of the New Testament is "Salvation through Christ" for all the world.

The first two centuries of the Christian Church were marked by decided missionary activity. The movement began on the return of the disciples from the Mount of Transfiguration and continued, though with lessened activity toward the last, until the beginning of the fourth century.

During the mediæval period of Church history, however, missionary activity practically ceased. It was a time of theological discussion and the rule of dogma. Mr. Blisswell says: "Under such conditions it was scarcely surprising that active mission work, at least in the East, should cease. The Church was too busy assimilating the barbarians at home to pay much attention to the barbarians beyond."

Only in the vision and personal effort of a few men was the missionary spirit manifested in this period. The spirit was not shared by the age, and the effort was purely personal. The world is richer, however, and the history of the Church ennobled by the missionary record of a few missionary spirits produced by that unmissionary day. The list begins with Ulfilas and ends with Raymond Lull—a noble company living in the spirit of Christ, but out of touch with their times.

The reawakening of the Church to missionary activity was begun by William Carey in 1792. As a result of his awakening what is called the modern missionary movement was inaugurated. Carey was a humble cobbler by trade, but became so interested in the study of heathen nations and world conditions that he gave himself to extended research. It was a vision of human need growing out of these studies that awoke in his heart a sense of personal responsibility and a new sense of the Church's obligation to give the gospel to the lost and ruined world. In that great sermon from the theme, "Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God," Carey started missionary fires which, in less than one hundred years, enkindled a new flame of missionary zeal in every great denomination on the globe and started a flaming evangel that has already encircled the earth. Carey left behind him in England the first missionary society organized for the propagation of the gospel among the heathen and set sail for India in the early summer of 1793.

Carey's call to advance was taken up in England by Howers and Venn, on the Continent by Vanderkemp and Janicke, in America by Mills and Judson. In a few years the movement swept through every Christian land, and organization for work among the heathen rapidly took shape.

The Baptist Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Heathen was organized in May, 1792; the London Missionary Society (nonsectarian), in 1795; the Church Missionary Society, in April, 1799; the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in 1814; the Glasgow and Edinburgh Societies, about the same time.

To us special interest attaches to the movement in America. The sailing of Carey and the formation of the London Missionary Society aroused great interest in America, and in 1796 the New York Missionary Society was founded, chiefly by the Presbyterians, although the Baptists and Reformed Dutch were represented. In 1797 the Northern Missionary Society was formed for the same work. The greatest impulse given to missionary interest in America, however, came from Samuel J. Mills and his friends at Williams College in their Haystack Prayer Meeting, held in August, 1806. Here, while in conversation and prayer, there came to these five young men a new vision of the world's need and a new sense of the gospel's power to meet this need. In meeting the objection offered by one of the company, "It is impossible to evangelize the heathen," young Mills sounded the slogan of world conquest when he said: "We can do it if we will." A direct result of the missionary interest and enthusiasm of these young men and their offer to preach the gospel to the heathen was the formation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the organization of which was effected in 1810. At the time the five students of Williams College met for prayer and the study of missions there were but seven mission boards or societies in the world. To-day every important denomination in Europe and America is organized for the work of evangelizing the heathen nations, and the movement of missions is represented by nearly four hundred boards and societies.

Following the establishment of the American Board of Commissioners the American Baptist Board was organized in 1814, followed by the Methodist Missionary Society in 1819. From the beginning the new era in missions has been characterized by the organization of denominational mission boards for the collection and application of funds in heathen lands, and in most cases by wisdom and success in administration.

Woman's Work.

A striking feature of the modern missionary movement is the strength and thoroughness of the women's organization for missionary work at home and abroad. About 1861 a movement began for the organization of the women of the Church into missionary societies. Gradually all the denominations were reached by this movement, and all have enlisted the women in one form of organization or another in the great work of missions. They are to-day a mighty factor in the making of a missionary Church at home and in furthering the interests of the kingdom through all the departments of Christian work on the mission field.

SUPPLEMENTAL AND AUXILIARY AGENTS.

During the latter years of this new missionary period the providential opening of heathen lands to the gospel and the consequent widening of the missionary opportunity of the Church brought on demands for a more widespread missionary awakening of the Church at home and for rapid extension of the work abroad.

Providential answer to these demands is found not only in the quickened denominational missionary conscience, but in a number of excellent supplemental and auxiliary agents of the Church in the great missionary enterprise. A brief statement as to the history and scope of the chief of these agents is given below. We offer the best authorities on each.

The Student Volunteer Movement.

The Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions was called into being in 1886 primarily to raise up among the students of North America a sufficient number of capable missionary candidates to meet the requirements of the various missionary societies or boards. To help these candidates or student volunteers in the preparation for their life work has been recognized from the beginning as falling within the purpose of the Movement. Another object is to develop among students who are to remain in Christian lands either as pastors or as laymen a sense of responsibility to sustain and reënforce the foreign missionary enterprise by intelligent sympathy, by the giving of money, by prayer, and by aggressive effort on behalf of the world's evangelization. The field embraces all colleges, universities, and other institutions of higher learning in the United States and Canada. (Mott's Report, 1902.)

Foreign Department of the Y. M. C. A.

In close connection with the organization of the Student Volunteer Movement was the development of a Foreign Missionary Department in the Y. M. C. A. As the college work of the Association had expanded so that there were organizations in over two hundred and thirty colleges, and as the Conferences at Northfield had quickened the spiritual life and the sense of fellowship, there arose an interest in and a feeling of responsibility for young men, particularly for the students in mission lands. A long journey by L. D. Wishard through those lands, with a vivid report of the conditions and the wonderful opportunities, occasioned the formation of a special department for the purpose of organizing similar associations both for students and other young men. The work was commenced with characteristic promptness, and in 1889 the first Secretary, David McConaughy, went to India to inaugurate a work second to none in the whole department of missionary activity. (Bliss.)

World's Student Federation.

Meanwhile other similar movements had been inaugurated. There had come into being, in addition to the American Intercollegiate Y. M. C. A. (1877), the British College Christian Union (1891), the German Christian Students' Alliance (1893), the Scandinavian University Christian Movement (1895), and a Student Christian Movement in mission lands. In August, 1895, representatives of these movements met at the ancient Swedish castle of Vadstena, on the shores of Lake Wetteren, for the specific purpose of uniting in a great federation the national intercollegiate movements of the world. The result was the World's Student Christian Federation. (Bliss.)

The Young People's Missionary Movement.

This Movement is interdenominational, under the direction of twenty representatives nominated by the Home and Foreign Mission Boards of the United States and Canada, and nineteen laymen chosen from the various Churches. Although it is interdenominational in organization, it directs all missionary activity through the boards into denominational channels. It is a missionary education association, preparing and publishing mission study text-books and other literature for the Mission Boards. It prepares literature for the missionary education of the Sunday school, syndicated materials for missionary treatment and illustration of the lessons of the International Series susceptible of such treatment, and offers aid in Sunday school conventions and institutes. It trains persons in summer conferences and metropolitan missionary institutes for mission study and other leadership in their Churches. Its purpose is through these agencies to deepen the spiritual life and to increase the missionary activity among the young laymen and the seventeen million members of the young people's societies and Sunday schools. The genius of the Movement consists in that it exists to serve the Mission Boards, for whom and by whom it is directed, preparing only the literature which they use and training leaders for their denominations. (Michener's Report, 1908.)

The Laymen's Missionary Movement.

In November, 1906, some men were celebrating the centennial of the Haystack Prayer Meeting in Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. The zeal of Mills and his companions stirred their hearts, and the Laymen's Missionary Movement was born.

The purpose of the Movement is thus expressed by Mr. Capen, President of the Interdenominational Laymen's Missionary Movement:

"1. To project a campaign of education among laymen, to be conducted under the direction of the various boards.

"2. To devise a comprehensive plan, in conjunction with said Board Secretaries, looking toward the evangelization of the world in this generation.

"3. To endeavor to form through the various boards a Centennial Commission of Laymen, fifty or more in number, to visit as early as possible the mission fields and report their findings to the Church at home." (Aim and Scope.)

WORLD-WIDE MISSIONS—A BRIEF SURVEY.

Since Carey landed in India the great continents of Asia, Africa, and South America and the islands of the sea have been invaded by an army of heroic missionaries who have gone forth proclaiming Christ Saviour and King.

At first they faced closed doors and met opposition, persecution, and martyrdom. The missionary call in the early days of the nineteenth century was a call to heroic sacrifice and service. Heroes indeed were the men and women who responded. The miracles of modern missions attest the quality of their faith and work. The progress to-day of the kingdom of Christ in every land witnesses to the power of our risen Lord and reaffirms the blessedness of suffering with him in behalf of a lost and ruined world. The missionary call of to-day is the call of world-wide opportunity.

A brief survey of a few of the great mission fields will suggest the lines upon which the kingdom is advancing in all lands, and will indicate in part the results of the modern missionary movement.

China.

Total area, 4,277,170 square miles; population, 400,000,000.

The Chinese are a people with a history running back perhaps forty-five centuries, when their institutions, their language, arts, government, and religion had begun to develop on lines from which no departure has ever been made.

The leading religions of China are Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism. Most of the people practice all three on different occasions and for different purposes. Confucianism is really a great system of ethics, with many elements of truth. Taoism has become "blank materialism," with uneducated and ignorant priests, almost universally despised, but regarded as indispensable evils. Buddhism owes its strength to the defect of Confucianism in not teaching a future existence and retribution.

Protestant missions in China began with Robert Morrison in 1807. Four forms of mission work have become well established: (1) Evangelistic, (2) literary, (3) educational, (4) medical. The object of mission work is thus tersely stated by Bishop Bashford: "It is carried on with the purpose of giving every person in the Chinese Empire a knowledge of the gospel as speedily as possible, of leading men and women to a personal union with Christ, of building them up in Christian character, and of creating as rapidly as possible a self-supporting native Church." Let us add: And of laying the gospel of Christ at the very foundation of China's new life. Dr. A. H. Smith, after thirty years in China, summarizes results as follows: "Christian missions have brought to China a new conception of God, a Father loving, caring for, and teaching his children. They have bestowed upon the Chinese a new idea of man as by creation and by redemption the child of God. They have wrought a wonderful spiritual transformation not in isolated instances only, but upon a large scale and with lasting effects. The call now is for Spirit-filled, thoroughly equipped leaders. In addition,

Christianity as a real leavening force in Western civilization has brought about the wonderful changes that have taken place and are now taking place in the material life, the educational system, the government, and the social customs of the Chinese."

Statistics, 1907.—Ordained missionaries, 830; unordained missionaries, 744; missionaries' wives, 1,134; other missionary women, 1,061; native workers, 9,444; stations, 789; out-stations, 3,920; communicants, 191,985; adherents not communicants, 136,126; contributions on field, Mexican money, $311,346; day schools, 2,383; pupils, 50,910; higher institutions, 208; students in same, 9,751; Sunday schools, 1,118; Sunday school scholars, 46,010; industrial schools, 11; students, 594; foreign men physicians, 236; foreign women physicians, 104; hospitals or dispensaries, 461; patients during one year, 1,125,422. Japan.

Area, 162,000 square miles; population, 46,000,000.

The Japanese are a remarkable people, intellectual, æsthetic, vivacious, patriotic. National weaknesses appear as a natural result of the defects in their religious and social systems.

The religions of Japan are Shintoism, Buddhism, and Confucianism. Shintoism, or ancestor worship, contains many degrading superstitions which have in a large measure been abolished by the entrance of Western learning. Buddhism is marked by both strong intellectuality and weak ignorance. Scholarly Buddhists believe in no Creator, but accept an endless evolution, with unerring causes and effects, and man can escape from the wheel of necessity and the evils of existence only by being absorbed back into the unconscious energy that pervades all things. The religion of the masses is a superstitious idolatry. There is much corruption among the priesthood, but a strong reform movement has set in. The methods of Christian work are being studied and adopted into Buddhism, and they seek for the secret of Christian earnestness. Confucianism, though not called a religion, has much to do with molding the moral life of the people.

Japan was opened to the world by Commodore Perry July 7, 1853. The missionary entered in 1859. Since that time a marvelous transformation has been wrought in the country, and Japan in almost every line of endeavor is abreast of the most progressive nations of the world. The missionary was fiercely resisted until 1873; 1873-88 marked a period of popularity and progress; 1888-1900, a period of reaction ("a morbid nationalism, constantly transforming itself into the hatred of foreigners, became epidemic"); 1900-08, a period of unprecedented success in establishing Christian influence and popularizing Christian institutions.

Evangelistic, educational, medical, philanthropic, and literary work is conducted by the missionaries. "When we consider that the government of Japan, the laws, the courts, education, and the family are being formed on Christian principles that recognize the worth and dignity of every man, woman, and child, that the worship of sun and moon has virtually ceased, that the grosser forms of idolatry have been abandoned, that the moral teachings of Christ have become a part of the ethical treasures of the people, that the 'friends of Christianity' number far more than its professors, that Christian thought has affected the old religions to a remarkable extent, we need not hesitate to say that, in spite of the evils of heathenism that remain, no other nation has ever been so rapidly permeated with Christian knowledge as has Japan." (De Forest.)

Statistics, 1907.—Missionaries, men and women, 883; native workers, men and women, 1,535; stations and out-stations, 1,214; schools, 156; pupils, 12,295; hospitals and dispensaries, 13; publishing houses or printing establishments, 5; professing Christians, 65,036. (Authority, "The Blue Book.")

India.

Area, 1,766,597 square miles. Population, 294,361,056.

In India we find a conglomerate race, many languages, a people with a peculiar genius for degrading religion.

The three dominant religions are Hinduism, with 207,104,026 adherents, Mohammedanism, with 62,458,077, and Buddhism, with 9,476,759. There are at least six other religious faiths, with adherents numbering from 18,000 to more than 8,000,000. Perhaps nowhere on earth is there a more intensely religious people; yet it is equally true that nowhere can there be found more degrading superstitions or corrupt religious practices than in India.

William Carey was the pioneer of Protestant missions. He began his labors in India in 1792. The work has advanced in the face of almost insuperable difficulties. Every line of usual missionary effort has been established, with great emphasis upon Christian education. The results have been most gratifying. From 1891 to 1901 the increase of Christian population was four times as rapid as that of the whole population. The later period has been marked by a decided deepening and strengthening of Christian influence in the nation.

Statistics, 1907.—Missionaries, men and women, 3,850; native workers, men and women, 32,654; stations and out-stations, 8,312; schools, 10,692; pupils under instruction, 409,339; hospitals and dispensaries, 295; publishing houses or printing establishments, 12; professing Christians, 1,152,847. The Moslem World.

The number of Mohammedans is about 225,000,000—50,000,000 in Africa, 170,000,000 in Asia, and 5,000,000 in Europe.

Islam is a religion of degradation. Some of its evil effects are: The idea of a God inconsistent and ignoble, with a corrupt prophet and leader; low moral standards; divorce-ment of profession and practice; sins of all kinds winked at and condoned, justified by the example of the prophet Mohammed; woman degraded; the home wanting; belief in a hereafter of selfish indulgence; fatalism; stagnation; and corruption.

The Moslem world is the neglected mission field of the world. Raymond Lull, the first missionary to Moslems, was martyred on June 30, 1315. There was then a lapse of five centuries in the work of Christianity for the followers of Islam. Henry Martyn, who went to India in 1806, was the first modern missionary to Moslems. Up to the present day the story of missions to Moslems is the story of individual consecration and heroic sacrifice, rather than of great mass movements of the Church.

Startling figures are presented showing the vast number of Moslems to whom the gospel has never come. In Africa "the situation is as if the United States, with her eighty-seven million people, had one missionary in Maine and another in Texas, and no gospel in between." In Asia there are forty-five million wholly unreached, "a challenge to faith and in some cases a rebuke for the neglect of the Church."

In India almost all of the work for the vast Mohammedan population is indirect and casual, though there have been some encouraging results.

Following are statistics from some of the wholly Moslem lands:

Turkey.—Missionary societies at work, 15; stations and out-stations, 569; missionaries, 404; native workers, 1,545; schools, 706; scholars, 36,618; hospitals, 25; publishing houses, 3; professed Christians, 79,000; communicants, 21,000. Much of this work is done among the Jews and decadent Oriental Christians.

Persia.—Societies, 4; stations and out-stations, 183; missionaries, 100; native workers, 280; schools, 136; scholars, 3,834; hospitals and dispensaries, 16; printing house, 1; professed Christians, 5,951; communicants, 3,000.

In Sumatra and Java Christian missions to Moslems have been attended with great success. Large numbers have been won to Christ, as many as 20,000 in Java alone. (Authority, Zwemer.)

Pagan Africa.

Area, 11,500,000 square miles; population, 90,000,000 pagans, 50,000,000 Moslems, 9,000,000 nominal Christians, including all white residents.

The pagan African is nature's spoiled child. Human life is cheap, infanticide common; marriage, a virtual slavery for the woman, is entered into early in life; polygamy is the common practice; laziness characterizes the man, and in the simple and savage life woman is the burden bearer. Where there is contact the temptations of a corrupt civilization are legion.

Fetichism, the religion of pagan Africa, is a religion of darkness. Superstition, belief in a multitude of evil spirits, malignant gods, the efficacy of every sort of charm, witchcraft, human sacrifice, cannibalism, revolting brutality, nauseating licentiousness are its characteristics. There are, however, faint gleams of truth; the idea of a supreme God is persistent.

Christian missions in Africa began with Robert Moffat in 1817. David Livingstone went to Africa in 1841. His heroic life and work made possible the illumination of the Dark Continent. There are obstacles to be overcome in mission work in Africa. Among them are polygamy, domestic slavery, the existence of six hundred languages and dialects, the climate with its prevalent and virulent malarial fever, unscrupulous and corrupt Europeans, the unsympathetic policy of the European governments, the liquor traffic, race prejudice, Roman Catholic opposition. But among the allies of Christianity may be mentioned the efforts of the governments of Europe toward the suppression of the slave trade, the liquor traffic, pagan brutalities, domestic slavery and polygamy, and the scientific investigation of the problems of climate and peculiar diseases and the tendency toward greater uniformity of languages and their reduction to writing.

Statistics.—Ordained men, 1,172; unordained men, 654; missionaries' wives, 787; missionary women, 503; native workers, 16,398; stations and out-stations, 6,734; communicants, 281,011; adherents, 613,248; day schools, 3,573; pupils, 202,748; higher institutions, 147; students, 8,501; men and women physicians, 81; hospitals or dispensaries, 127; patients treated in one year, 225,862. (Authority, Naylor.)

South America.

Area, 7,000,000 square miles. Population, 37,903,809.

The people are an ignorant or thoughtless multitude, following blindly in the footsteps of their fathers, who inherited a form of religion without its power. Their religion is Roman Catholicism—formal and corrupt. Holiness and the life hid with Christ in God have disappeared, and morality and religion do not often coexist. There is, however, a tendency to freedom of religious belief due to the reaction of a minority against the ancestral faith.

More than twenty North American societies, eight from Great Britain, one from Continental Europe, and other international societies are represented. There are different situations and complications in the various republics. The greatest need in all, however, is the Bible and education. The missionaries are very hopeful as to Protestantism's future in South America.

Statistics.—Ordained missionaries, 255; laymen, 199; wives, 201; other women, 117; male physicians, 6; native workers, 688; stations, 224; out-stations, 271; communicants, 30,469; adherents not communicants, 28,764; day schools, 170; pupils, 11,989; higher institutions, 14; students, 868; patients treated, 6,100. XVII.

MISSIONS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

The Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was authorized and its members were elected at the General Conference of 1846, sending out its first missionary in 1848.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions was authorized by the General Conference of 1878, and very soon thereafter perfected its organization and began work.

The General Board has administered funds on the frontier and in destitute regions of the regular work since 1846, and has contributed largely to the progress of our Church in the West.

The General Conference of 1906 authorized the Home Department of the General Board in order to better meet the complex problems of the growing city, industrial activity, and immigration.

The Woman's Home Mission Board was authorized by the General Conference of 1886, and has done an excellent work, pioneering in several lines of needed missionary activity.

China.

Work was opened in Shanghai by Dr. Charles Taylor in September, 1848. He was joined by Dr. J. Jenkins in 1849. These were followed by W. G. E. Cunyngham in 1852, J. W. Lambuth, D. C. Kelley, and W. Belton in 1854, and Young J. Allen and M. L. Wood in 1860. On account of the Civil War in America no more recruits came to the mission until 1875, when A. P. Parker arrived on the field. From that time recruits have continued to come, from one to five or more almost every year. The mission occupies the southern end of Kiangsu and the northern end of Chekiang Provinces, one of the most densely populated regions in China. All forms of missionary work are carried on—evangelistic, educational, medical, literary, woman's work, etc.

Evangelistic.—The territory occupied is divided into three presiding elders' districts: Shanghai, Soochow, and Huchow. In some of the established Churches—Moore Memorial, in Shanghai, for instance—all the services of the Church are held regularly. Evangelistic services are conducted also in the various chapels in the hospitals, schools, etc., and a successful Bible woman's work is conducted in connection with the representatives of the Woman's Board. The number of accessions to the Church last year was 307.

Educational.—Great emphasis is laid by our mission on Christian education. It is the aim to have one or more day schools connected with every station and middle schools in all the prefectural cities leading up to the higher institutions—viz., Soochow University, established in 1899, ranking as one of the two greatest educational institutions in China; the Anglo-Chinese College, in Shanghai, for boys and young men, opened in 1881; McLain Training School, at Sungkong, opened in 1899.

Eight boarding schools are conducted by the Woman's Board in China: McTyeire School for Girls in Shanghai, the Laura Haygood Memorial and the Davidson Bible School in Soochow, the Susan B. Wilson and the Hayes-Wilkins Bible Schools in Sungkong, the Virginia and the Memphis Schools in Huchow, and a medical school in connection with the Soochow Woman's Hospital. They have, in addition, thirteen day schools, with 390 pupils enrolled.

Medical.—The Soochow Hospital, built in 1883, and the Soochow Woman's Hospital together treat 30,000 patients a year. Medical work has also been carried on in Huchow.

Literary.—Dr. Y. J. Allen made many noteworthy contributions to Chinese literature. Some one has said that his books "have hurled the Chinese gods from their pedestals." Others of our workers have done valuable work of this kind, among them Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, Dr. A. P. Parker, Rev. George R. Loehr, Mrs. Alice S. Parker, Prof. N. Gist Gee, and Mrs. R. S. Anderson.

*Statistics.—Missionaries, 70; native workers, 195; organized Churches, 27; self-supporting Churches, 8; Church members, 2,190; Sunday schools, 53; Sunday school scholars, 2,573; Epworth Leagues, 32; Epworth League members, 892; boarding schools, 12; pupils,

953; day schools, 22; pupils, 683; hospitals or dispensaries, 2; patients treated, 32,069; total value of mission property, $367,425. (Authority, "A Century of Missions in China" and Annual Report of Board of Missions, 1908.)

Japan.

We began work in Japan in 1886. The progress has been steady. In May, 1907, the Methodist Church of Japan was formed by the union in one body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Methodist Episcopal, and the Methodist Church of Canada. This united Church begins with more than 11,000 members and 100 Japanese preachers under the leadership of Bishop Y. Honda, who was their own almost unanimous choice for bishop. The educational work and much of the evangelistic field continue under the fostering care of our missionaries, who will remain in an advisory and coöperative relation with the leaders of the new Church while their Conference membership is with the home Conferences. There is every prospect of widened influence and of a great future before the Methodist Church of Japan, which has been launched under the most auspicious circumstances.

Evangelistic.—Our mission is divided into three districts: Kobe, Hiroshima, and Matsuyama. The results of the evangelistic work show an increase in membership for the past year of 307, and “everywhere the general state of the Church is good. Church activity indicates a healthy growth spiritually and financially, and harmony and peace prevail in all the Churches and among the workers.”

Educational.—Kwansei Gakuin was established at Kobe in 1889. It comprises a Biblical Department, which gives full theological training to native preachers, and an Academic and College Department, with a total enrollment of 228.

Palmore Institute, at Kobe, had last year a total enrollment of 500.

The Lambuth Memorial Bible School for Christian women workers had 15 students enrolled, and has done much good work of a missionary character among the people of Kobe.

The Hiroshima Girls' School, established in 1889, with its enrollment of over 700 in the Academic Department and 225 in the Kindergarten Department, is doing a magnificent work.

Statistics.—Missionaries (including their wives), 36; native traveling preachers, 14; local preachers, 24; members, 1,776 (increase, 203); Sunday schools, 62; scholars, 5,401; Epworth Leagues, 14; members, 379; organized Churches, 22; Churches self-supporting, 3; boarding schools, 3; pupils, 1,278; day schools, 7; pupils, 534; total collections on the field, $3,927.34; total value of mission property, $103,767.50. (Authority, Annual Report.)

Korea.

The mission was opened in 1895 by Bishop Hendrix and Dr. C. F. Reid at the earnest request of the Yun family. Mr. T. H. Yun, an active member of the Church, while occupying important official positions, has now consented to devote his entire time to our educational work, and has charge of the school at Songdo. The setting apart of Korea as a separate mission was consummated at the last session of the China Mission Conference, of which it has heretofore been a part.

Evangelistic.—The mission comprises one presiding elder's district. The evangelistic work is carried on by the native Christians, and "in every section there are villages and hamlets where little groups of inquirers are gathered, earnestly seeking the light." The field is "white unto the harvest," and "with an adequate number of workers our missionaries believe that in ten years they can evangelize the part of the country allotted to us."

Educational.—The Anglo-Korean School was opened in 1906 at Songdo, with T. H. Yun as President. The total enrollment for the last term was 118. It is being made a strong force in the general education of the people as well as in the specific instruction of the students. Our mission has also a share in the Union School for boys in Seoul, which is doing good work. A Biblical Institute for the training of native preachers and workers has been projected.

The Woman's Board has four boarding schools—Tallulah Hargrove and the Girls' Boarding School in Songdo, Lucy Cuninggim Boarding School in Wonsan, and the Carolina Institute in Seoul—with a total enrollment of 90. They have also 150 pupils in their five day schools.

Medical.—Work is carried on in Wonsan, where are located two dispensaries treating 3,000 or more patients annually, and in Songdo, where between 500 and 1,000 patients are treated through the dispensary located there.

*Statistics.—Missionaries, 34; native workers, 48; organized Churches, 181; self-supporting Churches, 89; Church members, 1,988; Sunday schools, 33; Sunday school scholars, 1,770; boarding schools, 6; pupils, 346; day schools, 8; pupils, 232; hospitals or dispensaries, 3; patients treated, 1,852; total value of mission property, $69,000. (Authority, Annual Report, 1908.)

Brazil.

Work was begun in Brazil in 1874. The field has been divided into two Conferences of six districts in all.

Evangelistic.—"Access to the masses of the people with the gospel message is all the time becoming easier, and there is a growing desire upon the part of an increasing number to hear the word of life. The Church in Brazil shows a disposition to meet this increasing opportunity. The statistics indicate a healthy condition and encouraging growth." There was a gain in membership during the past year of 307.

Educational.—Granbery College, at Juiz de Fora, with an enrollment of 291, has a property valued at $93,000. The college has academic, theological, pharmacy, and dental departments. It has gained a reputation for faithful and honest work and wields a great power for good.

The Woman's Board conducts the Colegio Americano in Petropolis, Mineiro College in Juiz de Fora, Isabella Hendrix Institute in Bello Horizonte, and other boarding schools in Piracicaba, Ribeirao Preto, and Porto Alegre. The enrollment in their boarding schools is 130, and in the day schools 630.

Medical.—Considerable work is done in connection with the Central Mission, in Rio de Janeiro. Several hundred patients are treated annually through the dispensary.

*Statistics.—Missionaries, 55; native workers, 91; organized Churches, 44; self-supporting Churches, 5; Church members, 5,368; Sunday schools, 73; Sunday school scholars, 2,884; Epworth Leagues, 43; Epworth League members, 1,830; boarding schools, 7; pupils, 421; day schools, 6; pupils, 631; total value of missionary property, $409,990. Mexico.

Our work in Mexico was begun in 1873. The mission comprises three Conferences of seven presiding elders' districts in all. Evangelistic, educational, medical, and literary work is carried on.

Evangelistic.—One of the most encouraging facts about our work in this field is the growing revival spirit. Until recent years revivals were rare. Now they are becoming common. The missionaries report a growing interest in such work. The native preachers are becoming imbued more than ever with the revival spirit. There were 410 accessions to our Church in Mexico last year.

Educational.—Colegio Wesleyano, a training school at San Luis Potosi for native preachers, had 19 students last year.

Laurens Institute, at Monterey, had a total enrollment last year of 446, a faculty of 15 teachers, and a property worth about $85,000. "Such an institution must touch in a very vital manner the youth of Mexico and do much toward shaping the destiny of this nation."

The boarding schools of the Woman's Board are: Laredo Seminary in Laredo, Colegio Ingles in Saltillo, boarding school in San Luis Potosi, Mary Keener Institute in the City of Mexico, Instituto Colon in Guadalajara, MacDonell Institute in Durango, and Palmore College in Chihuahua. The total enrollment in these schools and in their day schools is 2,300.

Medical.—Hospital Monterey, where nearly 30,000 patients were treated last year, of whom the great majority were charity patients, "is doing a world of good."

Literary.—Translations of Professor Rodriguez: Spanish hymn book, Sunday school literature, "The Life of Wesley," "The Children's Crusade," Sheldon's "System of Christian Doctrine," and others.

*Statistics.—Missionaries, 56; native workers, 223; organized Churches, 108; self-supporting Churches, 3; Church members, 6,815; Sunday schools, 136; Sunday school scholars, 5,157; Epworth Leagues, 37; Epworth League members, 1,377; boarding schools, 9; pupils, 1,766; day schools, 10; pupils, 1,060; hospital or dispensary, 1; patients treated, 29,653; total value of mission property, $508,557. (Authority, Annual Report, 1908.)

Cuba.

The regular mission was established in Cuba in 1898.

Evangelistic.—The Conference held in Cuba last January was said to be "the most satisfactory, the most hopeful and harmonious we have yet had in the island." That is saying a good deal; but it is justified by the improvement in the number, quality, and better training of the native ministry, by the evidences that the work is solidifying and assuming organic form, by a more competent Church officary and more orderly methods in Church affairs, by the steady advance toward self-support evident in all directions, and by the general accessibility of the people to the word of life. The increase in membership for 1908 was 482, a net gain of almost twenty per cent.

Educational.—Four colleges are conducted with 19 teachers and a total enrollment of 345, and three day schools with an enrollment of 45.

The Woman's Board has two boarding schools—Colegio Eliza Bowman, in Cienfuegos, and the Irene Toland School, in Matanzas—with an enrollment of 322.

*Statistics.—Missionaries, 30; native workers, 44; organized Churches, 37; Church members, 2,847; Sunday schools, 44; Sunday school scholars, 2,847; Epworth Leagues, 17; Epworth League members, 675; boarding schools, 6; pupils, 667; day schools, 3; pupils, 45; total value of mission property, $232,223.71.

Summary.—Missionaries, 281; native workers, 639; organized Churches, 421; self-supporting Churches, 108; Church members, 20.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Why should we emphasize mission study in the Sunday school?

In systematic and thorough missionary education lies the foundation of the future missionary progress and success of the Church. If ever the Church is made ready for her ever-enlarging opportunity to take the world for Christ, a generation must be educated in the gospel and history of missions. Education implies the teacher, the text-book, the pupil, the class hour, etc. These are found in the Sunday school; and as an organized department of the Church the Sunday school is in shape to do this work without additional machinery or organization. The Sunday school takes the pupil in the formative period, and can through proper instruction train him to missionary faith and obedience. The Sunday school, therefore, has the making of the missionary conscience and character of the Church of the future.

How shall we introduce the theme of missions into the Sunday school?

1. By the selection of a Missionary Committee.

The committee should consist of from three to five members, representing the different grades of the school, and should be represented by one of its members on the Missionary Committee of the Church. The pastor and superintendent of the school should be members ex officio. The missionary superintendent or chairman, with the committee, should have general charge of the cultivation of the missionary life of the Sunday school, especially through the use of the missionary policy for the Sunday school provided by our Church, or such parts thereof as may be adapted to the local school. Each member of the committee should have some definite work to do, such as being responsible for one or more of the points of this policy.

2. By the making of a missionary atmosphere.

This can be done (1) by the introduction of missions in the worship of the Sunday school. This is effected by the occasional reading from the Scriptures of a missionary lesson, the frequent mention of missions and the missionaries in prayer, and the selection of missionary songs. It is not well to call special attention to the fact that they are missionary in sentiment, but just use them as other lessons and as the other songs are used, and the silent, educative influence will surely be felt.

(2) By a monthly missionary programme so arranged and rendered as to be interesting and instructive. This programme can be made strong and effective without interfering with the regular lesson period. Materials are abundant, and suggestive programmes can easily be had. Prayer and faithful work on the part of the committee can make this one of the most delightful features of the Sunday school work. A separate missionary programme for the Primary Department is suggested whenever expedient.

(3) By the use of pictures, charts, and maps hung on the wall and occasionally referred to, with an application of the lessons they suggest.

(4) By the occasional introduction of missionary curios, with brief explanation of their use, etc., or by the reading of a letter from some missionary in whom the pupils are especially interested, or by reference to a bulletin board containing fresh missionary facts and news items.

3. By the study of the Bible as a missionary book.

Provision for this will be made each year through the missionary interpretation of all the lessons of the International Series, which are clearly susceptible of missionary treatment. Besides this, our Church offers in the regular Sunday school literature a distinctly missionary lesson at the end of each quarter as a substitute for the review.

Supplemental Bible study in missions can be made very profitable, and may be carried on in various ways that will suggest themselves to the resourceful teacher.

4. By a supplemental course in missionary biography and history.

The Bible furnishes the principles, but it is not enough to teach only what the Bible contains on this subject. In a very real sense the Acts of the Apostles must be read in the light of the deeds of modern apostles; and even our Lord's life and great missionary purpose can be better understood and will have more meaning to the child if Jesus is conceived as actually carrying out that purpose in the world to-day; and still more so if there is furnished evidence that Jesus, according to his promise, is still present with those who are going among all nations to carry the truth concerning him. The simple, beautiful stories of real men and women who grew up in Sunday school, perhaps, and who are to-day carrying the truth of Christ to the Christless; their self-sacrifice and loving devotion to the people they are trying to save; the actual experiences of missionaries in dealing with the natives; stories about the native Christians, their peculiarities, their conversion and transformation, and their truly Christian fidelity—all these things will lend a reality and a vividness to missions that no amount of discussion of the abstract conditions and obligations can produce. Excellent materials for such studies are now available.

5. By a Course of Mission Study for Teachers.

This is provided for in the Teacher-Training Course. The trained missionary teacher could solve the problem of missionary education. A more extended study of missions than is provided for in this course is desirable. What, then, can be done to further help the teachers in this work? Is it practicable for the Sunday school teacher to take a wider course of study in missions? "The teachers already have their hands full with their regular Sunday class work and with their teachers' Study Circle Course." That is true; but this circle course is regularly completed in ten months. Why should not the circle then take up a course in mission study? Excellent courses are available through the Educational Department of the Board of Missions. If there is no Study Circle in the Sunday school, the teacher can have access to the Correspondence School of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which offers an excellent course of training in the mission study textbooks selected by our Church.

6. By putting missionary books in the Sunday school library.

Every Sunday school ought to have a good missionary library, even though a small one. The children should have the best and most interesting missionary books placed in their hands.

"The 1905 Sunday School Missionary Library," selected by Drs. H. M. Hamill and W. R. Lambuth, is especially recommended. It is in two sections, Section A and Section B. The books of the first are adapted to the needs of boys and girls, and the second section is made up of such books as teachers and older scholars will need. Either of these sections is sent postpaid for $5, or both for $10. The missionary section of the Sunday School Library should include missionary magazines and leaflet literature, etc.

The Young People's Missionary Movement has recently published a set of ten volumes of splendid stories, strong in missionary interest and influence. These books are so full of thrilling adventure and stirring fact as to catch and hold the youthful reader and at the same time to draw him close to the Master in his loving purpose to save the world. This set and other missionary books should be in every Sunday school library. The price of the set ($5) places it in the reach of all.

7. By asking for a monthly missionary offering.

In this care must be exercised to give full information as to where the money goes and how it is spent. A share in the support of a mission station or school, with an occasional report from the missionary in charge, deepens interest and is wonderfully educative in missionary faith and liberality. Because missionary giving belongs indispensably to missionary education, and because more Sunday schools probably observe this than any other missionary educational feature, there may be danger of mistaking a means for an end. The purpose of missionary education in the Sunday school is not to raise money, but the purpose in raising money is primarily to serve as one of the educational means in the rearing of a missionary Church.

8. By frequent use of missionary history, biography, incidents, and news in illustrating Bible lessons.

No field of illustration is so rich and none more accessible to the teacher. Faith, love, sacrifice, and heroic obedience find their highest exemplification in the splendid lives and noble service of the missionary.

9. By a plan for the promotion of definite and intelligent intercessory prayer.

Leading the pupils into the habit of definite prayer for missionaries and missionary objects will deepen their spiritual life and wonderfully quicken the missionary interest. Prayer cards, calendars, and prayer lists may be used with profit.

(Materials for use in the plans suggested in this chapter can be secured from the Educational Department, Board of Missions, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.)
